ITALY ISSUES WAR DECLARATION

ROME, May 22—A royal decree issued tonight declaring that a state of war exists has been accepted by the populace as a declaration of war against Austria. The whole Austro-Hungarian frontier and the Adriatic coast are included. The army and navy have been ordered mobilized. Several clashes of troops are reported.

AMERICAN WINS VICTORY IN 'GOOD STREETS' FIGHT

President Bancroft to Ask Elevated to Begin Summer Street Work.

The AMERICAN yesterday won a notable victory in its efforts to improve street conditions in Boston.

The results of this first victory came in the initial move toward remedying these street conditions.

President William A. Bancroft of the Elevated, in conference with Mayor Curley, agreed to recommend to the company's directors that the road begin its share of the re-paving work on Summer street by next Saturday at the latest.

Professor George F. Swain, chairman of the Transit Commission, last night declared the Commission would do its share of the Summer street re-paving work the moment the Elevated got busy.

President Bancroft told the Mayor he would call a special meeting of the "L" directors to take up the question of doing the Summer street work as soon as possible. The meeting will be held next Wednesday.

Mayor Curley said President Bancroft felt confident the directors would accept the recommendation and would vote to start the actual work of re-paving Summer street the last of this week.

GET DOWN TO BUSINESS.

It means getting down to business on the matter of these sadly needed street improvements.

It means that something definite is promised.

It means that actual street improvements will have been begun before the week is out.

And there is more good news in this victory.

Chairman Swain announced that not only would the Commission begin work on Summer street the moment the Elevated did, but would soon begin on Boylston street, also sadly in need of repairs.

OTHER STREETS IN TURN.

Later on, said the Chairman, the Commission will tackle Court street and Scollay square, both of which demand thorough treatment before they can be erased from Mayor Curley's "street roll of dishonor."

An this was not all the cheering news that was forthcoming yesterday.

Squads of city employes are patching up defects in the asphalt streets in several sections of the city. These are the holes to which the AMERICAN has called attention in photographs it has printed in connection with its baring of the facts concerning street conditions in Boston.

Bancroft Says "L" Sees Responsibility

President Bancroft of the Elevated said:

"The Elevated is always responsible for a portion of the paving in such cases (as in Summer street). It recognizes this responsibility wherever there is any dangerous condition, or any likelihood of such condition arising.

"We are always prompt to remedy such conditions just as soon as they are discovered.

"That we are always prompt to remedy dangerous conditions does not mean that the Transit Commission may not take charge of the street, and in course of its work make conditions that are uncomfortable, to say the least."

"No Better Work Ever Undertaken."—Curley

Mayor Curley said yesterday:

"No better work was ever undertaken than that of the AMERICAN in its attempt to give Boston the best streets in the world.

"To me the one thing necessary to put our streets in first-class condition is sufficient money to do the work.

"We should not waste time in attempting to criticize those whose negligence appears to have brought about the deplorable conditions now existing on our streets, but we should face the situation as it exists and determine how best the money can be raised to place all our streets in a proper condition."

Transit Commission Ready to Start Work

Chairman Swain of the Transit Commission said:

"If the Elevated starts work on Summer street next Saturday, this commission will do its share at the same time.

"We will start work as soon as the Elevated begins. We have awarded the contract and are ready to start when the Elevated does.

"We will start the repair work on Boylston street soon—in two or three weeks. Later we shall begin the work on Court street. As soon as practicable we shall begin on Scollay square."

Ask Police to Find Two Malden Girls

Police officials of Boston and New York have been requested to search for nineteen-year-old Helen Sheehan of No. 24 Avon street, and Celia Sullivan, sixteen, of Pearl street, Malden, who have been missing from their homes since Wednesday. The parents of the girls believe them to be in Boston. About a year ago the two went to New York and were brought home after four days on Broadway.

KITCHENER IS BACKED UP BY ENGLISH PUBLIC

War Secretary Even Hailed as Possible Dictator; New Cabinet Timber.

LONDON, May 23—"K. of K."—Kitchener of Khartoum—the man who as the head of the War Department has captured the imagination of the British Empire, stands today more firmly fixed in his high post than ever before.

Attacked in virulent fashion by the papers of Lord Northcliffe—the very papers which were largely responsible for his appointment last August—Kitchener went to Premier Asquith and inquired the Premier's attitude.

Asquith pledged Kitchener his support, and Kitchener told the Premier that he would refuse to resign under any pressure unless the Premier himself should ask it.

Winston Spencer Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, whose quarrel with Baron Fisher, first sea lord, was largely responsible for the crisis, bade farewell today to the heads of the various departments at the admiralty and, although he had been mentioned for various offices in the new administration, it is said there is a possibility that he will not accept a place, and that for the duration of the war he will content himself with a seat among the private members of the House of Commons.

The attacks on Kitchener aroused a tremendous wave of popular feeling in his support, and in the Stock Exchange resolutions in his favor were adopted and copies of the Northcliffe papers were burned.

URGE KITCHENER AS DICTATOR.

The scenes were without precedent. In like fashion, the great bulk of the press of the country has rallied to the War Minister's support, and the Pall Mall Gazette even suggests a dictatorship with Kitchener as the dictator.

Kitchener is secure. Asquith is with him. Lloyd George is with him. Sir Edward Grey is with him. These are the triumvirate that rules the Cabinet.

Likewise, these three and Kitchener rule the country. It is a dictatorship in fact if not in name.

Lord Northcliffe and Kitchener are the two great figures in the excitement that has stirred England. Northcliffe has been called a greater peril to England than the Germans since his attacks on the War Minister.

RUPTURE WITH NORTHCLIFFE.

EARL KITCHENER, ABOUT WHOM CONTEST RAGES

DR. GRIFFIN TRIES DEATH WITH KNIFE

Dr. Ralph Henry Griffin, twenty-four years old, a dentist, with an office at No. 36 Huntington avenue, was found late yesterday afternoon by Dr. Lawrence M. Staples with his throat slashed and lying unconscious on the floor of the bathroom of his apartment at the Fenmore, No. 1111 Boylston street. Staples summoned a physician and the police ambulance from station 16. The injured man was taken to the Boothby Hospital, in Worcester square. It is believed he will recover.

An open razor was found on the floor beside Griffin and both the door of his apartment and of the bathroom were locked when he was discovered. No reason could be given for the deed last night either by Dr. Staples, who lives with Dr. Griffin, or Griffin's friends at the Tufts Dental school.

Dr. Staples left Griffin apparently in good health and spirits yesterday morning. Returning late in the afternoon from the baseball game, he found the door of the suite bolted on the inside. Summoning William Hall, the janitor, the two men entered the suite through a rear window and discovered that the bathroom door was locked on the inside. They then placed the ladder against the bathroom window and entered.

The police pronounced it attempted suicide. Griffin's home is in South Portland, Me.

FIND MAN; FLED DANVERS TO WED

William Carter of Boston, the patient at Danvers State Hospital who escaped from that institution for the insane last Tuesday and fled with his sweetheart, Miss Elgina Babcock, to her home on Campobello Island, New Brunswick, and married her there Thursday night, was located yesterday on Campobello by Canadian officials whom he had eluded for two days following his marriage.

Carter declares, according to dispatches last night from Eastport, Me., four miles from Campobello Island, that he is not insane, that he was held in Danvers hospital against his will, that he will resist deportation and may sweer allegiance to the British government, now that he has wed a Canadian girl and is on Dominion soil.

The Eastport dispatches add that the task of getting Carter back into Danvers may be most difficult, as the fugitive has the hearty support of his bride's family and friends, is well supplied with money and is determined not to be brought back. His case recalls that of Harry Thaw.

MOBILIZATION OF ARMY AND NAVY PROCLAIMED

Fighting on Austrian Frontier Reported; Great Rejoicing in Rome

ROME, May 22.—A royal decree was issued tonight declaring that from tomorrow (Sunday), a state of war exists in the Italian provinces bordering on the Austro-Hungarian frontier and on the islands and coast towns of Italy on the Adriatic sea.

From May 23 a state of war is declared in the provinces of Sondrio, Brescia, Verona, Vicenza, Belluno, Udine, Venezia, Treviso, Padua, Mantua and Ferrara and the islands and communes on the Adriatic coast, as well as in all the fortresses which may be declared in a state of resistance. This proclamation is made by the order of the ministers of war and marine.

The steps leading up to the war declaration today were, in the order named, the signing by the King of the bill conferring extraordinary powers on the government during the war; issuance of an imperial manifesto calling all reservists to the colors, and, finally, publication of a decree of mobilization of the army and navy.

(The effect of the decree places the territory described under the control of the army and navy for defensive purposes. If no formal declaration of war by Italy follows, it will leave the burden of such a declaration on Austria, or if such a declaration by Austria is absent when and if Austrian troops invade the border territory described, the onus of the initiative agression will fall on enemy shoulders and Italy will thus be relieved of the responsibility of making a declaration and will be able to appear as the offended nation.)

Several clashes between Austrian outposts which had advanced across the frontier and Italian troops who drove them back up the passes, are reported from various points along the border. The Italian forces did not pursue the Austrians beyond the boundary line. It is not known whether any bloodshed occurred.

The whole country has responded as one man. The morale is unsurpassed. The organization was so perfect and advance arrangements had been so carefully made that ordinary railroad service remains undisturbed, something which has been accomplished in no other country.

Tonight monster crowds with thousands of flags paraded the city. After passing before the war, navy and foreign offices the parade proceeded to the Quirinal in the expectation of seeing the King, who already had returned to his suburban villa.

News from the frontier says that the Austrian barricades at Rovereto, a town in the Italian section of the Tyrol, were blown up today. Several Italian residents of the town were arrested.

The short hour just preceding the publication of the decree was one of great activity about the foreign office. Short and decisive conferences were held in which it is reported the German and Austrian ambassadors made desperate eleventh-hour efforts to forestall a formal declaration of war.

Lord Northcliffe, proprietor of the London Times and Daily Mail, whose crusade against Earl Kitchener precipitated the English cabinet crisis. The facsimiles of the headings of the Northcliffe papers recall the incident of Friday, when copies of those papers were publicly burned by members of the London Stock Exchange.

State of War in Frontier Provinces Is Declared by Italy

At 3:15 o'clock Foreign Minister Sonnino entered the foreign office. The statesman had been at his desk only a short time when, at 3:35 to be exact, Prince Von Bulow, the German ambassador, arrived and immediately was ushered in. His visit was short. Just ten minutes later Von Bulow, apparently much cast down, emerged from the foreign ministry and trudged, heavy-footed, to his automobile.

Fifteen minutes later the fateful mobilization order was issued.

At 5:25, while the streets were ringing with the news that mobilization had been ordered, Baron Von Macchio hurried to the ministry for a conference with Baron Sonnino.

The Austrian ambassador appeared greatly distressed. He remained only fifteen minutes and came out of the conference in a highly nervous state.

Meanwhile Minister of War Zupelli at 3:30 had visited the King to submit for his signature a number of important documents. The decree of mobilization, it is believed, was not the least important of these.

The general mobilization order was greeted with enthusiasm. Great crowds thronged through the streets, many of them waving flags of the allies and of the United States. Their rallying cry was:

A despatch from Vienna says:

"The Italian ambassador, the Duke of Avarna, leaves today for Rome. Austria has asked the United States to take over the protection of Austrian subjects in Italy. The American government has transmitted instructions to its ambassadors in Austria and Italy."

The King's decree for the assembling of the nation's armed forces came as a reply to the Austro-Hungarian government's statement regarding the Italian renunciation of the Triple Alliance treaty. The Vienna note was handed to the Italian ambassador at the Austrian capital on Friday, and was transmitted here today.

The note states that the Austro-Hungarian government cannot accept the Italian government's statement, which "contradicts the obligation solemnly adopted by Italy on December 15, 1913, which fixed the duration of the Triple Alliance until June 13, 1920, permitting renunciation only on a year's notice, and making no provision for the declaration that it is now void, prior to the expiration of such a period."

"The Italian government quite capriciously renounced all its obligations, and the Austro-Hungarian government declines to accept responsibility for the consequences which may result from this action."

Earlier in the day King Victor issued a manifesto to the nation explaining why Italy was forced to resort to arms, and appealing to the nation to do its duty and "win victory for its just cause." Another proclamation will be addressed to the army and navy.

There was expectation here that Roumania would follow Italy's example. The two nations are bound together by treaty, and Roumanian ministers have repeatedly stated that Roumania would act as Italy acted.

The Roumanian army has been mobilized, quietly but thoroughly, and a thunderbolt of 500,000 seasoned fighters is ready to be launched against Austria.

In Rome interest is attached to the forthcoming encyclical of Pope Benedict XV., which will define the Holy See's attitude toward the war. This will be followed by a papal bull, embodying new rules governing the Vatican's international relations.

From Milan comes an interesting report that Prince Adalbert, the Kaiser's third son, has been appointed vice-admiral in the Austrian navy, and that he has arrived at Pola to take up his duties.

Word was received here that William Marconi, inventor of wireless, has sailed from New York on the steamer St. Paul in response to the King's summons. He will have charge of the wireless equipment.

Gabriele d'Annunzio, playwright and leader of the war party, has joined the Italian navy, to accompany the Duke of the Abruzzi, commander-in-chief, and write an official history of the naval operations.

TEXT OF WAR BILL.

The measure giving the Cabinet full power to act, passed by both houses and signed by King Victor Emmanuel today, reads as follows:

The government is authorized in case of war and during hostilities to make decision with due authority of law in every respect required for the defence of the State, the guarantee of public order and urgent economic national necessities.

The provisions contained in articles 242 to 251 of the Military Code continue in force.

The government is authorized also to have recourse until December 31, 1915, to monthly provisional appropriations for balancing the budget.

This law shall come into force the day it is passed.

Announcement that the King had signed the "war bill" was greeted with cheers from a crowd of 100,000 persons gathered in the public square. A great procession immediately formed and headed by bands, the crowd marched to the various department offices cheering for the King, the militaries and for France, England and Russia.

A council of war was held last night, at which General Zupelli, the Minister of War, announced that all military preparations had been made and that Italy was now ready to strike.

The nation's war strength is greater and more magnificently solidified than at any other time in the history of the government.

Baron Van Macchio, the Austrian ambassador, began paying his farewell calls tonight and probably will leave Rome on Monday.

The situation of Austrian subjects of Italian blood in Trent is pitiable, owing to inhuman persecution by the authorities. All men between forty-two and sixty are called and sent to unknown destinations in the centre of Austria. Bosniaks, Croats and Slovaks are called to the Italian border. Hundreds of Italophiles were arrested and imprisoned for life. The Trent authorities have confiscated all food and the people are starving. There is almost no food offered and prices are extortionate.

CARUSO VILLA FOR RED CROSS.

All metals, even pots and pans, were confiscated in a house-to-house search. The famous statue of Dante was dismantled.

A despatch from Milan says that workingmen returning from Germany have informed the authorities there that 30,000 Italians employed in the Westphalian coal mines, have been forcibly detained and only the women and children will be permitted to leave Germany.

Seventeen more deputies enlisted today, among them being the Marquis Devitt Demarco, whose wife was Miss Ella Durham of Boston. The students of the Padua University have decided to enlist enmasse.

Signor Puccini and Enrico Caruso have turned over their villas to the Red Cross. The Duchess of Aosta has charge of the Red Cross nurses, and Princess Natalie of Montenegro, Queen Helena's sister, will act as her assistant.

Marshal Von Hindenburg will assume command of the Austro-German forces operating against Italy, according to a dispatch received here tonight.

ITALY'S MOVE WAS "PAINFUL SURPRISE" TO BARON BURIAN

By International News Service.

VIENNA, May 22.—Baron Stephen Burian von Rajecz, Austro-Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, today handed to the Italian Ambassador a note expressing "painful surprise" at the decision of Italy to "put an end in such an abrupt manner to the treaty which was based on the community of our most important political interests, which has guaranteed security and peace to our States for so many years and which has rendered Italy such notable service."

The note says the astonishment of Austria-Hungary is more than justified as the Italian government repeatedly announced its wish to maintain and even to strengthen those bonds of alliance between the two countries.

Baron Burian von Rajecz repeated that the object of the ultimatum to Servia was purely to protect the monarchy against the revolutionary machinations of Servia, and that this aim could in no way affect the interests of Italy.

ITALY REPROACHED.

When the conflict assumed a European character, he said, Italy proclaimed her neutrality without "throwing out the slightest suggestion that this war, which was provoked by Russia and prepared for long beforehand, could be of a nature to deprive the Italian alliance of its raison d'etre, and made no communication which justify the belief that it regarded the proceedings of Austria-Hungary as "a flagrant violation, both in letter and in spirit of the alliance and treaty."

The cabinets of Vienna and Berlin, he continued, even though declaring Italy's resolution to remain neutral, a resolution which in our view was fully compatible with the spirit of the treaty, nevertheless loyally admitted the view of the Italian government and an exchange of views which then took place established unaltered the maintenance of the triple alliance."

Under Article VIII of the treaty Italy presented claims which aimed at securing certain compensations in the event of Austro-Hungary obtaining advantages from the war, territorial or otherwise in the Balkan Peninsula.

CHARGE OF BAD FAITH.

Austria-Hungary accepted this standpoint, said the Baron, and declared herself ready to submit the question to examination, at the same time pointing out that as long as the eventual advantages accruing to Austria-Hungary remained unknown, it would be difficult to fix such compensations.

Baron Kurian von Rajecz contended that Italy shared this view, as was shown in the declaration made by the late Marquis Antonio Di San Giuliano, dated August 25, last year, to which the Italian foreign minister said that it would be premature to speak of compensations.

Nevertheless Baron Burian declared Austria-Hungary always has been ready to begin conversations on the subject, and when Italy made her demands Austria-Hungary accepted even this as a basis for negotiation, although in its opinion Article VIII of the treaty never referred to the territory of the treaty-bound parties, but related purely and simply to the Balkan peninsula.

While it was impossible to accede to all the demands, Austria-Hungary showed a sincere desire to reach an understanding, made sacrifices which were only justified by "a desire to uphold the alliance existing for so many years in the common advantage of both countries."

GERMAN ANSWER MAY DISAVOW THE GULFLIGHT ATTACK

By International News Service.

BERLIN, May 22.—Germany's answer to the AMERICAN note and sinking of the Lusitania cannot be expected before next Tuesday or Wednesday.

It would now be no surprise if the German reply in addition to a defence of the German position regarding submarine warfare, and particularly of its case for the sinking of the Lusitania, with the alleged shipment of ammunition aboard, contain certain proposals which might serve as a basis for further negotiations between Germany and the United States.

It is not at all improbable that Germany also will advance an alternative suggestion that the United States permit its subjects to travel on ships belonging to belligerents only if these vessels are certified by the United States as having no munitions of war aboard and that such certified ships would not be subject to torpedoing without notice.

The Admiralty has reason to believe, it is stated, that the Gulflight was not damaged by a submarine, but from some other cause. None of the submarine commanders have reported the damaging of the Gulflight and so much time has elapsed that all underwater boats which might possibly have torpedoed the vessel have now returned to their bases.

Bulgaria Remains Friend of Roumania

GENEVA (via Paris), May 22.—The Journal De Geneve states that Vassil Radeslavoff, Bulgarian premier, has announced officially that Bulgaria will not attack Roumania if the latter enters the war.

Monday, Tuesday and from 11 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. Wednesday

The Filene Quarterly Stocktaking Sale

Apparel for Women, Children and Men

Every 13 weeks we clean house. The odd garments and the small lots left from the busy selling of the preceding quarter—the model garments, imported and others, that have served their purpose—all the surplus merchandise that does not fit into our clearly defined merchandising plans—ALL of this gets new prices in this sale.

Prices ⅓ to ½ less than our original low prices

Practically every section of the store contributes to the sale. Women's, Misses', Children's and Men's Wear will be included. For the most part the merchandise is suitable for immediate use.

Wednesday the store will be CLOSED until 10 A. M.

After that hour the remaining odd lots will be disposed of. Thursday, May 27, the store will show a radical change from Spring to NEW SUMMER FASHIONS.

Russians and Germans Locked in Gigantic Battle Along the River San.

TEUTONIC FORCES CHECKED BY MASS OF CZAR'S REINFORCEMENTS

PETROGRAD, May 22.—Locked in a titanic death grapple in what is likely to prove the greatest battle of the war to date, the Slavs and Teutons are struggling for the mastery along a battle line of thirty-five miles fronting on the river San, the mastery of which will give the victor a preponderant position for future campaigning.

The Germans, flushed with the gains of the week, sought to turn the Russian retreat into a rout, but under the stimulus of the Czar's personal presence at the front the Russians succeeded in halting the German advance. In this the great masses of Russian reinforcements hurled against the Kaiser's forces brought terrible havoc, and now they are pressing steadily forward.

The Russians are advancing along the left bank of the San and have occupied, after severe fighting, four villages, and have beaten the Teutonic forces back in an attempt to retake Arth. On the right bank one town has been retaken by the Russians.

RUSSIANS MAKE FLANK ATTACKS.

Having checked the victorious advance of the Teutonic allies, the Russians now are attacking both flanks of the Teutonic salient extending across the San on the front from Jaroslaw to Stenjawa. The conflict is proceeding night and day.

Despite signs that the supreme Austro-German effort on this front is losing its momentum, it is premature to assume that the turning point of the great battle has been reached or that the Germans will not make even further progress at some points.

The Teutonic allies are still pushing forward north of Jaroslau and on the flank of Przemysl, where they have captured some of the front trenches near Gurasalkof, twelve miles southeast of the fortress.

Elsewhere on the main front the Russians are holding their own, while on the flanks, on the left bank of the Vistula and in Bukowina they continue to drive the Russians before them.

3,000,000 SHELLS FIRED.

Only one thing can fully realize the stupendous nature of the plan of the Austro-Germans to paralyze the military power of Russia and so leave themselves free to deal with the allies in the west.

The present battle, both in strength of forces engaged and the expenditure of ammunition, exceeds all other features of this war.

On the main section from the Vistula to Bukowina, the Teutonic allies are believed to have deployed 1,500,000 men, while their total present strength on this front is estimated at double that number. Merely in the Gallician section the war has brought up 1,000 guns and in a few days had discharged something like three million shells.

It is authoritatively stated that Emperor William is in the Jaroslau district, personally directing the operations. It is expected he will remain there until the question of Italy's participation in the war is finally decided, when a rearrangement of the Austro-German armies may be necessary.

HEAVY TEUTON LOSSES.

At the beginning of last week, when the fighting was comparatively subdued the casualties of the Austrians and Germans averaged 10,000 daily and some of the regiments had been reduced to a single company.

In authoritative military circles it is stated that the situation, which is quite satisfactory for the Russians. Though the Teutonic allies may gain further territorial advantage it is exceedingly improbable that any of the troops now engaged in Galicia ever will be in condition to return to the western front.

AUSTRIANS IN RETREAT.

The Austrian rear guard is reported to be making desperate efforts to cover the retreat and check the Russian offensive.

Russian successes are shown in the new offensive against the Turks. Russian troops have been landed upon the Black Sea Coast of Asiatic Turkey, the Admiralty announced today. The following statement was issued:

"Troops were landed from our fleet in the Black Sea on May 20. After breaking the enemy's resistance, they destroyed quays and stations in the region east of Ereeli."

TURKS ARE DRIVEN BACK.

Attempts of the Turks to assume the offensive along the coast were repulsed. Our troops have occupied Iaral, Van and Bashkaleh."

Dispatches from Mitylene state that a thirty-six hour bombardment of the Turkish troops stationed at Kum Kapu (two miles from Sedd-el-Bahr) by a squadron of British warships on Thursday and Friday.

The dispatches state that two thousand Turks were killed and five thousand wounded in an attack by the Turkish troops against the fortified positions of the Australian and New Zealand troops on the peninsula of Gallipoli. In this action the British lost 500 men.

ALLIES WARSHIPS SUFFER.

A dispatch from Constantinople asserts that two more warships of the Anglo-French fleet were hit by the Turkish batteries at the Dardanelles yesterday, according to the Turkish War Office. The ships were hit repeatedly and had to retire, the Turks that they were badly damaged.

"On the Dardanelles front the enemy during the night of May 19 attacked our right wing, but failed in vain. Attacks on the centre and left were also repulsed with great losses to the enemy, who, retreating in great haste, abandoned their dead in the trenches.

"No land fighting occurred on May 20, but our airmen dropped bombs, one of which hit a large enemy transport.

"The enemy at Sed-El-Bahr suddenly attacked our left wing under the protection of their naval guns, but were unsuccessful. They were driven back by a counterattack with the bayonet.

"Some of the enemy's ships close to the entrance of the Narrows attempted to support the attack on our left wing. Our artillery hotly shelled the Anatolian coast successfully bombarded the enemy warships. Two were repeatedly hit.

"There is nothing to report from the other theatres."

FRENCH GAIN CONTROL OF WHITE WAY AND INFLICT HEAVY LOSS

By International News Service.

PARIS, May 22.—Strong progress is being made by the French in their smashing drive against the Germans north of Arras, but the invaders are fighting stubbornly and are contesting every inch of ground. Fresh progress for the French between Arras and Labassee is reported in an official communique issued by the War Office today. The Germans delivered fierce counter-attacks in an effort to regain the lost ground, but these were repulsed with heavy losses.

Particularly violent night attacks were delivered by the Germans in an effort to regain the White Way, a fortified position on one of the five southern ridges of Lorette Hill, which was captured by the French yesterday. This gave the entire Lorette Hill and the ridge to the south had been held by the Germans for six months to the French.

The text of the communique follows:

"Our troops at the end of yesterday succeeded in clearing the trenches of the White Way. Numbers of Germans were killed in the line of communication. The others surrendered. The number of prisoners taken and in new lines retained. I have given it to many who suffered as I did and who have since come they have regained have been of great value.

"Violent artillery duels have taken place in the region of Ablain and Neuville St. Vaast. Our batteries have been very effective and efficient, a result will do, and I will send all the medicines for to try. If after you have used them, and they have proven them selves to be the long-wished-for means of curing your Asthma, send me their name, and I will send you the sum of $1.00, the price. I don't want a cent if they don't cure you. You are the only judge in the matter. Could anything be fairer?

"The offer is too important to neglect or delay. Why suffer longer when relief and cure is offered you free. Do it NOW. Address:

LORD KITCHENER'S POWER GREATER THAN EVER

"forced" Kitchener on the country last August. When war was declared, the Northcliffe papers so vociferously demanded Kitchener's appointment that the choice was promptly made.

Since then, however, the rupture between the two has begun and widened to an impassable breach.

It began with Kitchener's refusal to allow correspondents with the armies at the front. Northcliffe believed this policy wrong. Friends of Kitchener point now to the fact that the policy has proven in the Germanic-stricken account of the British defeat at Mons, which caused much debate, was evidence that Kitchener's policy of restraining such correspondents was wise.

It was an article in the Times that brought on the present crisis. A correspondent at the front, a personal guest of Sir John French, sent back an article which declared that the British troops were hampered and were suffering needless loss through a shortage of high-explosive shells, for which Kitchener was blamed.

This article would have led to a debate in the House of Commons had not Asquith announced that a coalition Cabinet would be formed, and the Premier's personal appeal to powerful Liberals was necessary even then to prevent a debate that might have meant the fall of the government.

Then came the attacks on Kitchener in the Times, the Daily Mail and the Evening News, Northcliffe papers; and the burning of these papers in the Stock Exchange, followed by Kitchener's conference with Asquith and his refusal to resign.

The demonstration in the Stock Exchange is thus described:

"Charlie Clarke appeared with a copy of the paper containing the article. His speech was brief but forcible, and his words were punctured with roars of cheers from the mass assembled in front of him. Clarke concluded by proposing a resolution expressing entire confidence in Lord Kitchener and strong condemnation of the venomous attacks made on him.

BURN OFFENDING PAPERS.

"This was carried with acclamation, the resolution being drafted for publication, and telegrams sent to the Prime Minister and Lord Kitchener.

"The offending newspaper was then publicly burned on the floor of the house, amid free resounding cheers for Lord Kitchener closed the memorable demonstration. All obtainable copies of the Daily Mail and the Times were thrown into the bonfire."

It is added that posters were stuck up on the walk, reading:

"Which would you rather put your money on, Kitchener or Northcliffe?" and "The Germans' new ally, the Daily Mail."

Similar resolutions were adopted in the Baltic Exchange, and copies of the papers were also burned there.

The Northcliffe newspaper extracts gives an idea of how the controversy over Kitchener has raged:

The Daily Mail—"It has never been pretended that Lord Kitchener is a soldier in the sense that Sir John French is a soldier. We can only hope that no such misfortune will befall him as that he should be permitted to interfere with the actual strategy of his gigantic war. An advertisement he published yesterday, urging the enlistment of men of forty and upwards, which we greatly regret having printed, and which the Daily Mail will decline to print again, is proof of the extremities to which Kitchener is driven."

Nemo WONDERLIFT KOP SERVICE

The Pinnacle of Achievement

Of all the Nemo inventions, the WONDERLIFT KOP SERVICE is the most notable. It is the one great achievement for which the inventor has been striving for years, in the meantime having created many valuable features, most of which have been important steps toward the consummation of the ideal—a Corset constructed so as to correspond to the structure and function of the abdominal muscles, contracting and relaxing in unison with them. It lifts and supports the vital organs; reduces the size of the body; relieves the physically weak; creates style and beauty of figure with perfect comfort.

Italians Quickly Mobilize Perfect Fighting Machine of 2,500,000 Men

NEW ARMY EQUIPPED WITH ALL LATEST INVENTIONS FOR WAR

ROME, May 22—During its months of "watchful waiting" following the outbreak of the war Italy pushed its war preparations in extraordinarily rapid and thorough manner until she had gradually mobilized an immense fighting force of two and a half millions of men.

This perfecting of the nation's war plans went on night and day until finally the country stood in absolute and entire readiness. The military critics say that no country at any time has been better prepared for war.

The perfection of Italy's military condition is all the more understandable in the light of the knowledge of to how great an extent Italy profited from the very outset by the lessons in modern warfare which the Entente and Teutonic allies rehearsed in France and Belgium, in Poland and Galicia and at the Dardanelles. Italy took advantage of every fact or suggestion developed by the war.

Italy learned the value of the heavy guns, learned the lessons of trench warfare, of motor transportation, the essential need of vast stores of munitions of war, of railroad concentration, the value of the aeroplane for reconnaissance, and the value of vast numbers of men. It is a fact that Italy has learned all these lessons of the war with the utmost thoroughness.

ARMY QUICKLY BUILT UP.

So well did Italy learn that last Summer's paper value of the Italian army is utterly obsolete. At that time she had a standing army of about 300,000 men. With the first and second lines of reserves the army could then have been brought up to 3 million men.

Contrast this with the announcement that Italy's complete preparedness for war found her with practically two and a half millions of men in the field.

These are the details of Italy's peace strength last Summer. Before the war started she had 14,121 officers, 250,000 men and 55,717 horses.

Within six months after the war started she had increased these figures enormously, according to the statements of military experts to-day. Italy had then 1,150,000 for the standing army, 245,000 for the mobile militia and 240,000 for the territorial militia.

ARMING OF THE TROOPS.

The Italian infantry are armed with the 6-6mm. Mannlicher-Carcano magazine rifle, pattern 91. A part of the territorial militia still have the Vetterli-Vitali, model 70-87. Officers have the sword and automatic pistol. The war found the Italian artillery in process of rearmament. It possessed about 100 field batteries armed with the 75mm. Krupp Q. F. field gun, and others with an older weapon. Meanwhile the deport gun, 75mm., pattern 1911, had been adopted, and 100 batteries of these guns should have been delivered by the end of last year.

There are some useful 6in. batteries of Krupp howitzers and a large assortment of siege and fortress guns ranging up to large calibers. The normal siege trains include 9, 12 and 15cm. guns and 15 and 21cm. howitzers. These are stored in the northern fortresses, but heavier weapons will doubtless figure in the field.

The army is a compact and well trained force. A great body of these troops have the advantage of the experience of the campaign in Tripoli. The Italian cavalry is considered excellent and the artillery of a very high grade.

From the naval standpoint also Italy's strength is seen in this list of ships which she has. Superdreadnoughts, 4; dreadnoughts, 6; battleships, 18; cruisers, 21; torpedo gunboats, 8; destroyers, 49; torpedo boats, 85; submarines, 30.

Comparison of the figures of last summer and of the present time shows Italy's wonderful advance in military matters, and this remarkable progress was a big step forward in her national progress.

GROUND FOR DISPUTE.

Italy's grounds for dispute with Austria centred in territory about the head of the Adriatic, and her determination to have a hand in controlling the Adriatic was evidenced as early as October 26, when she landed marines at Avlona, in Albania, across the Adriatic from her own territory, to "protect the city from Mohammedan attacks."

The popular Italian hostility to Austria is principally based upon the battlecry of "Italia Irredenta," or "Italy Unredeemed." The territory referred to as "unredeemed" includes the Trentino (the city of Trent and the mountainous section that surrounds it), and Istria, the peninsula upon which are situated Trieste, Pola and Fiume. Trieste is Austria's great Adriatic seaport; Fiume is Hungary's, and Pola is the naval base which protects the two.

Italy claimed this territory on the ground that the inhabitants are largely Italian, that the lands mentioned were and should be a part of Italy and that a rectification of her northern frontier should be effected to her.

The proportion of Italian-speaking to Teutonic-speaking population in the territories named is about even. Trieste became Austrian about 700 years ago; and the Istrian peninsula passed to Austria in the eighteenth century. The other territory has not been Italian at all in modern times.

The Italian "Green Book" contends that Italy was forced to make these demands to maintain its dignity, and that the demands were based upon right and justice.

Prince von Bulow remained long in Rome as a German emissary seeking to harmonize Italian and Austrian viewpoints. The Italian politics, Prince Salandra was considered a force to be held in check, Premier Giolitti a force for peace.

Italy, it is believed, has received assurances from England and France that they will permit her to dominate the Adriatic after the war. Minister Delcasse of France and Winston Churchill for England voiced these assurances in public interviews.

The financial position of the nation is not strong. Her deficit is huge, her revenues falling. Ten months ago she owed Germany 1,500,000,000 on the balance of trade.

From Austria Italy demanded more than the dual country was apparently prepared to grant.

President Sure of German-Americans

WASHINGTON, May 22.—"For myself I have never for a moment doubted the loyalty and fidelity to our nation and our flag of the Americans of German derivation and ancestry, but it is very gratifying indeed to get so patriotic a resolution conceived in so high a spirit."

This was the reply which President Wilson today sent to Paul J. Prodoehl, president of the German American Catholic Union of Baltimore when he received the resolutions adopted by the organization in which the members pledged themselves to support the administration in any controversy that might arise with the fatherland.

AUSTRO-GERMANS GAIN GROUND IN CENTRAL GALICIA

VIENNA, May 22, via London, 7.20 p. m.—The Austro-German allies are gaining ground slowly in the great battle now in progress in Central Galicia. Announcement to this effect was made at the War Office today as follows:

"Fighting is proceeding in Middle Galicia. The allied troops have maintained the territory gained against all Russian counter-attacks. In slowly progressing attacks we are gaining further ground daily.

"Along the line of the River Pruth it is generally quiet. At Bojana, east of Czernowitz, Russo-Roumanian hostile attempts to reach the south bank of the river failed, with heavy Russian losses.

"In the hilly country of Kielce (Southern Russian Poland) the enemy is again retreating in a northeasterly direction after obstinate fighting."

Captain Phil. Lydig Joins Russian Army

NEW YORK, May 22.—Captain Philip M. Lydig, New York broker and clubman now in Warsaw, Poland, has joined the Russian army and will use in its interests the knowledge he gained in the commissary department of the United States Army. Word of his enlistment was received by cable today.

SIR JOHN FRENCH REPORTS PROGRESS AT QUINQUE RUE

LONDON, May 22.—Sir John French, commander-in-chief of the British forces in France, today reported to the northeast of Festubert, and some infantry fighting. We made further progress south of Quinque Rue. On the remainder of our front there is nothing to report."

Official announcement was made here today that the French and British forces operating against the Turks on Gallipoli peninsula had gained further ground on the southern end of the peninsula. The statement reads:

"On May 19, in the southern area of Gallipoli peninsula, the French forces, in conjunction with the British, made a considerable advance and have consolidated the new position.

"On the night of the 18-19th the Turkish forces made determined attacks against the Australian and New Zealand corps which were all repulsed with heavy loss, their casualties being over 7,000, of which 2,000 were killed. Our losses did not exceed 500."

SUBMARINE K-4 ASHORE IN FOG

By International News Service.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 22.—The United States submarine K-4, one of the newest additions to the submarine flotilla of the Atlantic fleet, is ashore on the sandy beach of Nomans land in thick fog.

Two officers and twenty-six men were working desperately tonight to save the undersea fighter, which attracted much attention in New York during the naval review. The submarine tender Fulton is standing by.

Submarine Sinks British Ship Off the Irish Coast

QUEENSTOWN, May 22.—The British sailing ship Glenholm, a vessel of 1,968 tons, has been torpedoed and sunk in the Atlantic ocean, sixteen miles off Beech Haven, Ireland, by a German submarine. The crew were landed today.

The twenty-seven members of her crew were warned and given time to take to the boats when the submarine began firing at the ship.

After thirty-nine shells had been discharged the German commander concluded it took too long to sink the ship that way, and fired a torpedo.

The survivors, including the captain's daughter, rowed all night in two open boats. The only vessel they encountered was a small schooner which gave them food and a compass.

TRADE CONFERENCE BROKEN OFF BY STATE DEPARTMENT

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The State Department announced today that because of "differences" the negotiations between the trade advisers of the department and Sir Richard M. Crawford, commercial adviser of the British Embassy, on the subject of facilitating the movement of American cargoes have been broken off.

Following as it does the action that the informal acts of trade advisers of the State Department regarding cotton cargoes were to be considered as binding on this government, as the British government maintained, it is taken to mean that the United States reaffirms its implied refusal which might be interpreted as approval of Great Britain's order-in-council under which she claimed the right to maintain a long-distance blockade and supervise all trade between this country and Germany.

The subject which was under consideration was the movement of the American cargoes out of Germany. The trade advisers of the State Department in the interest of Americans who had bought goods in Germany were endeavoring to effect an agreement with Great Britain under which the latter would suspend to some extent the operation of her order in council pending a diplomatic adjustment of the question between the two governments.

According to information obtained from an authoritative source an informal agreement was reached. It was understood by the State Department's trade advisers to provide that cargoes bought Americans in Germany prior to March 1 could be taken on through neutral ports, provided they left those ports by June 1. There was a probability also that the time would be extended to June 15.

It developed later, however, that Great Britain claimed the right to supervise the loading and dispatch of the cargoes. This contention resulted in the trade advisers of the State Department breaking off negotiations.

This puts an end to the informal efforts of the trade advisers of the State Department to secure relief for American importers and exporters, and the negotiations to be made in the future will be conducted as straight diplomatic questions through the office of Robert Lansing, counsellor of the State Department.

The State Department is awaiting no official admission by the British government of its error in assuming that the understanding reached between the trade advisers of the two governments on the subject of cotton cargoes was binding on the United States government.

Troop Trains in Crash; 100 Killed

CARLISLE, England, May 22.—Probably 100 people were killed and more than 200 injured, several of them seriously, today, when a troop train crashed head-on into a passenger train on the railway line between Carlisle and Newcastle.

The latest report says seventy-three bodies have been recovered.

The wrecked trains, which collided at Gretna caught fire after the collision and many of the injured were burned to death. Railroad officials admitted this afternoon that one hundred persons may have been killed.

The collision was due to a heavy fog. Twelve cars were smashed.

The horror of the catastrophe was increased when the London express, unwarned, through carelessness, dashed into the debris.

Physicians and nurses were sent from Carlisle and Newcastle to care for the injured, who were taken by special trains to hospitals in both cities.

Thirty-five dead soldiers and civilian passengers were taken from the wreckage after three hours' work and seventy seriously injured were removed to hospitals. Several of the victims were burned to death when flames broke out, but the fire was finally extinguished and the rescue work continued.

REAL REPUBLIC FOR SUFFRAGE, SAYS DR. SHAW

National Leader for "Votes" Says Men Are Now Doing Work of Grandmothers.

Rev. Anna Howard Shaw, the national woman suffrage leader, told a Boston gathering in so many words yesterday that the question whether women will cease to love their husbands after they get the ballot has nothing to do with the suffrage argument.

According to the speaker the desire for a truly representative republic is at the bottom of the whole contest, whether women vote right or not.

In closing Dr. Shaw said that the truest thing our Massachusetts grandfathers did was to make a Constitution which could be changed and that it is to be changed next November.

Dr. Shaw was speaking at a luncheon given in her honor at the American House, with 175 women and 125 men present. She was introduced by William Lloyd Garrison, Jr.

"GREATEST FORCE IS BALLOT."

She began her address by stating that the United States is neither a republic nor a monarchy.

"We are neither," she declared, "and therefore have no real standing in the world. We women want to have a true republic which will represent all the people. This desire is at the bottom of our whole contest. Whether women vote right has nothing to do with the matter, whether women vote as their husbands tell them to do has nothing to do with it, or whether they cease to love their husbands has nothing to do with it. A government cannot rightfully reckon with only part of the people.

"No nation can strive to dominate and hold in subjugation another race and prosper, and no sex can dominate and hold in subjugation another sex and prosper.

"The anti-say governments are ruled by force. They are, but the greatest of all forces is the ballot when it is in the hands of the people. We want it, therefore, in the possession of all the people.

"I read in the paper that the question of suffrage is to be put up to the people of Massachusetts. I deny that it is true, it will simply go before men people, admirable people to be sure, as far as they go.

"We are continually being told that we should be satisfied with our homes and the household duties; that which was good enough for our grandmothers should be good enough for us.

WHO IS DOING WOMEN'S WORK?

"We are getting tired of that kind of argument. Nearly everything that our grandmothers did in their homes has been taken away by the men. They say we are taking men's positions, but do they stop to think what they have done? A conference of women's garment makers met recently in New York, and there was not a woman among them. A milliners' convention, all men, and they spoke of the need of creating more expensive styles, and bakers, all men, had a conference to devise means to counteract a tendency in women to make some-made bread.

"The men should realize they are engaged in more of their grandmothers' work than are the women with their grandfathers' employment. I saw a picture, a large photograph, of gentlemen in convention. They appeared proud — these men washers-of-dishes-in their pictures taken.

"When the men tell us to be satisfied with the home duties and what our grandmothers did I feel like asking them if they would be satisfied with the work of their grandfathers. They would consider such a query insane.

"Nobody Loves a Fat Man," Nor Woman Either, for That Matter

Madame Blanche Arral, the noted Belgian prima donna, now in this country, has discovered a natural remedy for removing fat without the necessity of resorting to massage or dieting or other weakening and dangerous processes. She herself grew so stout that she could no longer sing on the stage in her favorite roles. Through this discovery she reduced 34 pounds in thirty days. She says it is follows:

MME. BLANCHE ARRAL.

"Previously I tried without success practically every known method of reducing, including Bath Salts, Starvation Diets, Hard Exercises, Rubber Garments and other weakening, sweating processes. I have made myself sick trying to reduce, but all to no avail. Finally I began taking Marmola Prescription Tablets, as many of my friends, who report reductions not as agreeable and wonderful as my own. The ingredients for some time past have been imported to America so that now any one who wishes to try the plan may get the Tablets at Druggists and without ordering. For full information, write

Mrs. Lovell Again Divorced Ex-Husband in French Army

Mrs. Rosalind Morse Larrabee-Lovell of Newton, whose new divorce greatly interests the "navy set."

The fact that the wealthy Mrs. Rosalind Morse Larrabee-Lovell of Newton and the "Navy Set" has secured a divorce from her second husband, Walter C. Lovell, also that Mr. Lovell is now serving in the French army became public yesterday.

Equally interesting, in this connection, is a denial from Mrs. Lovell that she is contemplating a third marriage to a naval officer, or to any other man. This denial was made by Mrs. Lovell in answer to a report which had been circulated as soon as the divorce was known.

A naval officer, now stationed at Newport, is acquainted with Mrs. Morse and, on visits to Boston of late, has been seen riding in Mrs. Morse's automobile, in company with mutual friends.

But Mrs. Morse will not admit that there is the slightest foundation of fact for the chatter about her making a third journey to the altar.

CLEVER AT OUT-DOOR SPORTS.

Mrs. Lovell has a wide circle of friends, especially in the so-called "Navy Set" in Boston, she is clever at many out-door sports. She has been up in the Maine woods for whole Winters, enjoying weather and sporting programs that would dismay the average city woman. She is a practised auto driver, and is thoroughly at home at the steering wheel of the car which she owns with her younger sister, Miss Constance Morse.

The Walter C. Lovells had been living at No. 120 Court street, Newton, which is the home of Mrs. Clara B. Morse, Mrs. Lovell's widowed mother. Mrs. Lovell's father was George W. Morse, one of Boston's best-known corporation lawyers and partner of City Councillor Thomas J. Kenny. Mr. Kenny is one trustee of the Morse estate, and up to recently, was Mrs. Lovell's guardian.

Mrs. Lovell's older sister, Miss Harriet C. Morse, the writer, was married on March 12 to Nicholas Richardson, an English mining engineer from Newcastle-on-Tyne, who is now living in Newtonville. One brother, Samuel Finley Breese Morse, is the "Sam" Morse of football and art fame. He was captain of the Yale varsity eleven for two years. He has illustrated books written by his literary older sister, Harriet.

AGAIN CUPID WEEPS.

Rosalind Morse, the central figure in the present developments, was married on September 11, 1900, to Benjamin F. Larrabee, Jr., a New York banker. A boy born on June 5, 1902, was named William M. Larrabee. Later the Larrabees were divorced, the father retaining custody of the child.

On New Year's Day, 1910, Mrs. Rosalind Morse Larrabee became the wife of Walter Lovell, a Boston broker with offices at No. 87 Milk street. Lovell had gone from Harvard in 1903 into the financial district.

The Lovells were active socially and entertained frequently. Mrs. Lovell's friends thought that she had found happiness again, after the wreck of her first marriage.

But about a year ago little rumors crept out that Rosalind Morse's second marriage was not leading to any greater or more permanent satisfaction than the first had.

Finally the break came, but it was accomplished so quietly that only intimate friends were aware at the time.

It was last January, almost five years to a day from her second marriage, that Mrs. Lovell had her lawyer file a divorce libel for her at East Cambridge. She charged Lovell with confirmed intoxication, also with failure to support her.

Mr. Lovell sailed for France on the very next day after the libel was filed. He enlisted in the French army and is now said to be driving an ambulance in the medicinal corps.

The libel came to trial in due time and Mrs. Lovell secured her divorce. A decree nisi was entered for her at East Cambridge on April 12 last. It will become final next October.

Suit to Be Tried in Essex or Suffolk

By a decision handed down by the full bench of the Supreme Court, the suit of Charles J. Hanley, administrator of the estate of William Hanley, against the Eastern Steamship Company, will have to be tried either in Essex County, where the accident happened, or in Norfolk County, the home of Hanley. The case was tried in Suffolk County. On July 20, 1910, about 3:25 o'clock at night, William Hanley, while a passenger on the steamer Bay State, from Boston to Portland, was thrown overboard when the vessel lurched. The accident happened between Eastern Point and Thachers Island, which the court ruled is Essex County.

Machine Gun Men to Get Instruction

To further stimulate interest in the military preparedness of the State, Governor Walsh will send eighty officers and men of the machine guns companies of the State Militia to the Camp of Instruction at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., for the two weeks from July 25 to August 7.

This decision was reached yesterday by the Governor at a conference with Adjutant-General Charles H. Cole. The detail will be of sixteen men from each of the five machine gun companies.

HEAT OVERCOMES FOUR PERSONS

HEAT PROSTRATIONS.

Four heat prostrations were reported in Boston yesterday, the second hottest day of the season.

The maximum temperature was recorded at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the mercury, which had been steadily soaring throughout the day, reached 90.

After remaining at this point for about an hour it gradually dropped, the evening being made much cooler by a slowly rising breeze. The degree of humidity was high, but the presence of a breeze made it particularly noticeable during the earlier hours of the day.

Out in Malden the heat was indirectly responsible for the arrest of three persons charged with assault on Patrolman John J. Long. The prisoners were Mrs. Minnie Tonner and her two sons, John and Israel. With other residents of the Suffolk square district the trio had carried chairs out upon the sidewalk to enjoy the evening zephyrs.

When the officer ordered them to remove the chairs it is alleged they attacked him with the same. The officer was struck over the head several times, sustaining slight wounds. He was later treated at the station house.

FIELD DAY OFF TILL TUESDAY

The field day of the Somerville public schools, which was to be held yesterday at the Somerville Recreation Field was postponed to Tuesday on account of wet grounds. The 2,000 children, who were to participate in the exercises were notified by the no-school signal, sounded on the fire whistles.

Sleep Much, Eat Slow for Health, Says Dr. Cabot

"Eight to ten hours sleep a night are necessary to good health," was one of the assertions made by Dr. Richard C. Cabot before 500 persons yesterday afternoon in his address, 'What Young People Can Do for Public Health' at the annual meeting of the Land a Hand Society at the Park Street Church.

"The most important thing for good health is good behavior," said Dr. Cabot. "It is not as much a question of exercise as of common sense and good conduct. We cannot avoid bacteria altogether, but our health depends mainly on preserving our vital powers to resist them.

"The favorite topics which people fear today are flies, germs and drafts, but they cannot be avoided and do no harm if we keep ourselves in good condition and follow out these simple rules. Never sleep less than eight hours a night, better nine or ten, three regular meals each day, eaten slowly; no alcohol, purity of food, plenty of fresh air at night, and if possible during the day, as well as mental tranquility attained by minding our own business and doing nothing that we are ashamed of."

Mass Meeting to Hear About Twilight Sleep

A mass meeting to spread the truth about Twilight Sleep will be held at the Cyclorama tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. Professor John Osborne Polak, Twilight Sleep expert at the New York Long Island Hospital, Mrs. Mary Boyd, who has written a book on the subject, Dr. Edwin Smith, who has administered this treatment to more than a hundred patients at the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, and Dr. Eliza Ramsey, who also has treated successfully many cases at her own private hospital on Day State road, will be some of the speakers.

Over twenty mothers who have taken the treatment will be present at the meeting which is to be held under the auspices of the New England Twilight Sleep Association. Mrs. Jessie F. Attwater, editor of "Femina," will preside.

PATRICE BUTLER NOW MRS. FULLER

Brookline Girl Becomes Bride of Chicago Man at Ceremony in Trinity Church.

A wedding of interest in Boston and Brookline took place at Trinity Church last night when Miss Patrice Madeline Butler, daughter of Mrs. J. Albert Butler, of No. 3 Walnut street, Brookline, became the bride of George Elmer Fuller of Chicago. Rev. Alexander Mann, pastor of the church, officiated. The maid-of-honor was Miss Gladys Butler, sister of the bride. The bridesmaid was Miss Mildred Fuller, sister of the groom. The best man was Richard Fuller of Boston, a cousin of the groom of Chicago.

The ceremony was followed by a reception at the Hotel Westminster. The couple will take a honeymoon trip to the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

The bride is a graduate of Wellesley, '13, and of the Brookline High School. The groom is a graduate of Chicago University. He is now engaged in the electrical business in Chicago, where the couple will make their home.

They met a year ago as maid-of-honor and best man at the marriage of Miss Butler's younger sister.

Baby Fatally Hurt in Forty-Foot Fall

While playing on the roof of his home, No. 135 West Broadway, South Boston, yesterday afternoon, four-year-old Louis Yarinski, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Yarinski, fell forty feet through a skylight, sustaining injuries which may result in his death. He was taken to the City Hospital.

CLERK M'NULTY PROMOTED.

Charles B. McNulty was promoted from clerk in the street laying out department to the water-income division of the city service, and his salary advanced from $1,200 to $1,500 a year, under an order approved by Mayor Curley yesterday.

MAYOR SIGNS WOODS ORDER

Mayor Curley has signed the order recently passed by the City Council giving to the widow of Councillor William H. Woods $1,052.50, the balance of his salary for the current municipal year. The order was adopted by unanimous vote.

MISS BUTLER, WHO BECAME BRIDE OF GEORGE E. FULLER

COMES 2100 MILES TO CLEAR MOTHER

Son's Story Establishes the Innocence of Mrs. Carpenter and Dr. Carpenter.

Dr. George H. Underhill and Mrs. Edith Carpenter, whose cases on statutory charges were not pressed by District Attorney Pelletier, experienced the unusual by being discharged by Judge Irwin in open court. The ordinary action is to have no further procedure following a not press.

Dr. Underhill and Mrs. Carpenter, the latter the widow of the late Frank O. Carpenter, head of the commercial department of the English High School, Boston, were arrested on indictment warrants on January 8 of this year. They had been living at the Hotel Rockingham at No. 521 Beacon street. Both were released on bail of $500 each.

CAME FROM HONDURAS.

When the case was called in court the defendants pleaded not guilty. The cases were continued, and information was brought to District Attorney Pelletier that if he could but hear the story of Mrs. Carpenter's son, Arthur W. Carpenter, he would be convinced of the innocence of the defendants.

But the son had gone to British Honduras with Dr. R. E. Merwin's expedition on behalf of the Peabody Museum to search the ruins of temples of an extinct race. It was not possible to reach him by ordinary means of communication, so Mrs. Carpenter sent her aunt, Sara E. Witte, all the way to British Honduras to bring her back, 2,100 miles.

Mr. Pelletier heard his story, which with additional information furnished him by Assistant District Attorney Daniel V. Melsaac resulted in the cases being not pressed.

This is the statement that has been filed as a record on order of and made by Mr. Pelletier.

HEARS SON'S STORY.

"The son of Mrs. Carpenter has told the story of Dr. Underhill's relation to the family. He has been living at their home about seven or eight years. Mrs. Carpenter's husband died about two years ago. The doctor is a friend and also medical adviser. Mrs. Carpenter is in his care.

"No jury would convict after seeing defendants and hearing story of this young man.

"District Attorney."

Later Dr. Underhill and Mrs. Carpenter appeared before Judge Irwin in the Suffolk Superior Criminal Court and were discharged by him.

Prohibition Talk on Common Today

At a meeting to be held on the Common this afternoon the prohibition cause will be boomed by two speakers. Mrs. Mary Kenney O'Sullivan, founder of the National Woman's Trade Union League, will speak on "Why Labor Should Fight Liquor," and William C. McNamara, former president of the Lynn Central Labor Union, will also speak. A letter from Professor Irving Fisher of Yale on the text, "National prohibition is a job-maker rather than a job-taker," will be read.

Only Three Hundred Invitations Issued for Morgan-Converse Weddin

Grandson of Late Financier Working Here to Be Near Bride-to-B

Photographic reproduction of the invitation to the Morgan-Converse nuptials. Separate invitations were issued for the reception and wedding breakfast. Friends who have received these invitations note with surprise the use of the "Jr." after Mr. Morgan's name, as he is the son of John Pierpont Morgan, present head of the house, grandson of the John Pierpont Morgan who died in Italy in 1913. He was named for his great grandfather. Friends wonder if the "Jr." is a mistake of the engraver or the Converses or if he wishes to use the "Jr."

Ceremony at Notable Event in Society to Take Place June 15 in Dedham Church.

Three hundred invitations were sent out last week for the wedding on June 15 of Miss Louise Converse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Shepard Converse of No. 26 Lime street, West End and "The Crossways," Westwood, and Junius Spencer Morgan, Jr., grandson of the late J. Pierpont Morgan and heir to the millions of the house of Morgan.

The announcement that only 300 wedding guests have been invited is regarded somewhat ruefully by both New York and Boston society, among whom the Morgan-Converse wedding is the chief topic of social interest just now.

The wedding is generally looked forward to as being the event of most importance in the social world this season, and the three hundred privileged persons who are in receipt of the coveted invitations are numbered among the most envied members of society today.

The Tudors, the Converses and the Morgans will be fully represented. Mrs. Frederick Tudor, the mother of the quartet of beautiful girls of whom Louise Converse's mother is one; Mrs. James A. Garland, Mrs. Reginald Foster Hall, Mrs. Reginald Phemia Slade and Mrs. W. Starling Burgess the other three, now reside at the Lime street Winter home of the Converses. As the grandmother of the beautiful bride-to-be, she will prove an interesting figure at the event.

IN LITTLE DEDHAM CHURCH.

The ceremony will take place at St. Paul's, the picturesque little Episcopalian Church at Dedham.

Promptly at 12 o'clock noon, the bride will follow her sister Augusta, who is to be maid of honor, up the aisle to the strains of the wedding march.

Miss Converse will be given away by her father, Frederick Shepard Converse.

It is the desire of Miss Converse that the utmost simplicity shall prevail, but the church will be a bower of roses and there will be a profusion of blossoms at the Converse house afterwards.

The bride will wear an exquisite gown of white satin with a court train. Her veil will be caught with orange blossoms.

THREE ATTENDANTS.

She will have only three women attendants, her oldest sister Augusta, who will be maid-of-honor, Miss Jane Morgan, sister of the groom, and Miss Marie Converse, another sister of the bride.

Augusta Converse is a debutante of last season. Her gown is to be of lavender and pink chiffon and she will wear a large picture hat. The other two girl attendants Miss Morgan and Miss Marie Converse, who has not yet come out, will be gowned alike, each wearing frocks of yellow and pink chiffon with hats of the same tone.

Following the ceremony the wedding party and guests will go to the Converse home "The Crossways," where a wedding breakfast will be served on the tennis court, which will be enclosed with the entire interior banked with bowers of pink roses and other blossoms. Mrs. Frederick Tudor will wear chantilly lace, one of the wonderful heirlooms of the Tudor family, built on white satin and shrouded with soft white velle.

After the wedding breakfast the young couple will leave on their honeymoon, which will be spent upon an estate in the country selected for its remoteness and well equipped for the comfort and happiness of the honeymooning couple. Friends believe that this means they are going to the Converse estate at Lake Sunapee.

MORGAN NOW LIVING HERE.

Just now Mrs. Converse and her three daughters are among the busiest people in the world planning for the important event. Dressmakers, milliners, florists, caterers, decorators and a host of other trades people are coming and going at the Westwood mansion.

Meantime the Morgan-Converse match is being generally discussed as one of the most ideal weddings in prospect in a number of years. Apart from the fact that two very wealthy families are represented—though of course the number of Morgan millions outshines the wealth of the Converses—the match is replete with romance.

Since the announcement of the engagement last year the young couple have remained the synosure of all eyes socially.

The Converses instead of remaining at their West End Winter home have chosen to keep the beautiful Westwood country estate open and have lived there. Naturally Westwood proved a magnet for Junius Spencer Morgan during his Harvard days and more particularly since the engagement announcement.

He has been such a frequent visitor there that Mrs. Converse has had a small suite of rooms set apart for her daughter's fiance and he is welcomed as one of the family at any and all times when he chooses to visit Westwood. The result has been that Mr. Morgan's small in town suite frequently lacks an occupant.

WORKS IN STATE STREET.

When the doors of the banking concern, Brown Brothers & Co., at No. 60 State street, where he works, close afternoons, the stalwart devoted youth rushes out to Westwood in a long, low racing car that burns up the miles in the shortest amount of time.

Louise Converse, rather slender, more petite in general appearance than otherwise, with blond hair, blue eyes and she always well groomed appearance so characteristic of the "Miss" appears to be less than medium height when walking beside her fiance.

Young Morgan is a physical giant in appearance, a tall, muscular, long-limbed youth, well over six feet, with tawny pompadour hair, a skin slightly tinged with the wind and the sun tan of outdoor living.

He is boyish in attitude and manner of address. His eyes seldom fail to smile or twinkle. They are, however, keen, grey, wide set and a somewhat long, strong-jawed face marked particularly by a square chin of unmistakable strength.

In manner, appearance, wealth and general fitness, Junius Spencer Morgan, Jr., is regarded by socially aspiring daughters and dowager mothers as THE most eligible young man to be found.

REAL "LOVE" TENNIS.

Tennis is the sport of which both are very fond. They ride, drive and walk about the beautiful grounds of the estate and not infrequently are seen spinning to and from Boston together in either a Morgan or a Converse car.

Mr. Morgan graduated from Harvard last June. Just after his graduation he took the little apartment in town so as to be near his place of business on State street and has retained it ever since. The Morgan family elected that he should get his initial banking experience in Boston rather than in New York, because it seemed better that the future master of the Morgan millions acquire his apprenticeship away from New York, and secondly—the most important and forceful reason—young Morgan decided that he simply had to remain in Boston because his fiances lived here.

Court Orders Notes Returned to Cheney

Benjamin P. Cheney, husband of Julia Arthur, the actress, will get his promissory notes, valued at $50,000 each from Fred J. Taber and Fred A. Welneke, stockholders in the Mt. Vernon Distilling Company of Maryland. The full bench of the Supreme Court ordered the notes returned to Cheney, who was interested in the concern, through an attempted brokerage suit.

POWDER IN SHOES AS WELL AS GUNS

Foot-Ease to Be Added to Equipment of Hospital Corps at Fort Wayne.

Under the above heading the Detroit Free Press, among other things says: "The theory is that soldiers whose feet are in good condition can walk further and faster than soldiers who have corns and bunions incased in rawhide.

The Government's foot powder order is recorded as the last word in the scientific outfitting of the defenders of the flag."

The English, French and Allied Troops constantly make use of Allen's Foot-Ease. This foot powder, shaken into the shoes of soldiers, has long been in use in the German army, and Uncle Sam's adoption of this form of treating and easing the feet is in line with the expressions heard daily for more than twenty-five years, in all parts of the world, from millions of people who are shaking Allen's Foot—Ease, the antiseptic powder for the feet, into their shoes, and using it in the foot bath, as the only practical and lasting treatment for easing and absolutely preventing sore feet. It can be obtained from dealers everywhere for 25c, or a trial package will be sent by mail free if you write to Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y., U. S. A.

CARTER DECLARES HE'S NOT INSANE

Thaw was returned to the United States.

Details were obtained yesterday at the Danvers end of the manner in which Carter and his bride-elect planned his escape and their cross-country flight over the Canadian border.

Carter is the son of a Greater Boston family. He was under treatment at the Westboro State Hospital at times, up to a year ago, when he was transferred to the Danvers Hospital.

Superintendent George M. Kline at Danvers says that Carter is in a paranoic condition, with a tendency to deteriorate mentally. Dr. Kline added that, while Carter is not violent, he is queer in some ways now, but he was a parole patient at the institution and was allowed to leave the grounds occasionally to visit the home of his sister, Mrs. Lord, in Danvers.

PREPARED FOR WEDDING.

Elgina Babcock, daughter of Guilford Babcock of Wilson's Beach on Campobello Island, was working in the Lord household. She and Carter fell in love and laid their plans. A month or so ago Miss Babcock left the Lords and came to lodgings in Boston. There she made preparations for her wedding. She also confided some to her landlady.

Last Tuesday Carter obtained permission to call on his sister. He did not return. A day or two later Superintendent Kline received a telephone call from a Boston woman who said she was the landlady with whom Elgina Babcock boarded temporarily in Boston and that she understood the girl was planning to marry an asylum patient named Carter. The woman thought the superintendent ought to know it.

Carter and Miss Babcock hurried separately to Eastport. Carter arrived there Wednesday night. Miss Babcock was detained in Bangor and did not get to Eastport until the next day. Meanwhile Miss Babcock's father was apparently expecting them, for he crossed the four-mile stretch of Passamaquoddy Bay between Campobello Island and the Maine shore, met the two at Eastport and took them over to Campobello. The wedding took place Thursday night at Wilson's Beach on Campobello, where the Babcocks live. A Church of England clergyman officiated.

WIRED TO EASTPORT.

Meanwhile Superintendent Kline of Danvers Hospital had wired City Marshal Follis of Eastport to locate Carter. Follis heard Friday that Carter had gone to Campobello. As the island is part of New Brunswick Follis sent word to Canadian Immigration Inspector Barker and Canadian Customs Inspector Newman to find Carter and hold him as an undesirable alien.

The inspector learned of the wedding. The bride was home with her father. But the resourceful bridegroom was not to be found. It was believed that he had fled up the St. Croix River in a motor boat to St. Andrews, N. B.

But Carter had not left Wilson's Beach at all, according to last night's reports here, which say the correct was found him. Just how he was found is not stated.

150 'TWILIGHT' BABES; NO DEATH

One hundred and fifty "Twilight Sleep" babies without a single death due to the treatment is the record at the Boston Homeopathic Hospital since the new "painless" treatment was begun there last Fall and it is now expected by Dr. Nathaniel W. Emerson and Dr. Edwin W. Smith, in charge of the "Twilight Sleep" work that the number will total 200 babies before July 1st.

"Twilight Sleep" at the hospital is being administered at the rate of about a case a day.

Notwithstanding condemnation of the treatment by one group of physicians, the advice of another group to "go slow," and the preference of a third group for the Cesarian section or the use of ether as an anaesthetic in the place of scopolamine, the success of the work at the Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital is declared by the advocates of the treatment to be the strongest proof of the efficacy of the method.

Dr. Smith stated yesterday that the treatment at the hospital had proven uniformly helpful to the mother and child. He said:

"Pain has not been banished in those cases where the mother arrived at the hospital too late to be brought under the influence of the scopolamine before the arrival of the baby. We have had two or three such cases. In one case a baby died whose mother had been given "Twilight Sleep" treatment, but the death of the child was due to an infection which the mother had caught from another patient after the treatment had given her a painless crisis and after the baby had been born successfully by the method. "Twilight Sleep" was not to blame for the death.

"In no case have we lost a child, whose death could in any way be charged up directly to the "Twilight Sleep" treatment.

LIQUOR LEADS IN ACCIDENT CAUSES

Dr. W. J. Brickley of Relief Station Says Alcohol Handicaps a Man Suffering Injury.

"Booze causes more accidents than anything else," says William J. Brickley, resident surgeon at Haymarket Square Relief Station, a statement in this week's issue of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

From his long experience, he claims these conclusions:

Alcohol obscures the diagnosis.

Alcohol prevents adequate treatment.

Alcohol increases the danger of intercurrent complications.

Alcohol retards the process of repair.

Alcohol increases the mortality in accidents.

According to Dr. Brickley, it takes a hard drinker 20 per cent. longer to make repairs from fracture of the large bones than the non-drinker takes for a similar injury. On the subject of booze causing accidents, he says:

CAUSES OF ACCIDENTS.

"Under the influence of alcohol, a man falls on the sidewalk or from a wagon and injures himself. The probability is present, but extremely small, that he would have so injured himself if he had not been under the influence of alcohol.

"A longshoreman improperly slings a package of merchandise which falls and injures himself or his workmates. A carpenter improperly fastens a scaffolding which collapses and injures himself or a person passing by. Again, a teamster or a chauffeur, while under the influence of alcohol, injures himself or others in the highway. The intoxicated person turns off the gas in the bedroom, then accidentally turns it on. Gas poisoning, explosion or fire follows."

On alcohol increasing the danger of infection at the time of the accident he maintains:

"When a man is intoxicated he does not take proper care of his wound. In his stuporous or irrational attempts to aid himself, dirt and infection enter the wound or he breaks the skin over a fracture and thereby changes a simple injury into a dangerous one. For example: A drunken man walked about with a compound fracture of the ankle which had the bones protruding through the flesh. He had been walking in the street in that condition.

"The intoxicated person permits great blood loss which weakens vitality and makes infection easier.

Another example is that in which a teamster under the influence of alcohol, steps on a rusty stable nail, takes no care of what the ordinary man in his senses would know to be a possible serious accident. Later, infection and maybe tetanus develop from what is a neglected injury."

DELIRIUM TREMENS.

Regarding delirium tremens he says:

"Delirium tremens is a frequent accompaniment of fractures in alcoholics. There may be present only delirium, or a brawling, violent hospital patient just irrational enough to tempt interference with the fractured bone, or wish to sit up when he should lie still, or to seek to change a position which should not be disturbed.

"Often the delirium may become violent that all proper apparatus must be removed, and the patient treated solely for the general condition and at the expense of the local condition. The local results obtained in such cases are not good. Those alcoholics who, because of a small accident are confined to bed, frequently develop pneumonia. With the delirium tremens accompaniment of the brain comes the delirium due to the pneumonia. A delirious process in the chest develops pneumonia in about seventeen chances in 100 or gets well by the ordinary hospital method.

ROOSEVELT WINNER IN LIBEL SUIT; BARNES TO TAKE AN APPEAL

Juryman Who Caused Deadlock Finally Sides With Eleven Who Favored the Colonel.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 22.—Theodore Roosevelt today won the $50,000 libel suit brought against him by William Barnes, the Albany County leader. The jury, after being out more than forty hours, came into court at 10:07 a. m.

Attorney William M. Ivins, for Barnes, will take an appeal.

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdict?" asked Clerk J. Clarke.

"We have," said Foreman Somers.

"What is your verdict, Mr. Foreman?" asked Clarke.

"We find for the defendant," said Somers.

The courtroom immediately was in a buss of excitement regardless of the fact that Justice Andrews just before the jury came in had admonished the spectators that, regardless of the jury's verdict either for Barnes or Roosevelt, there should be no demonstrations.

JURY IS POLLED.

The jury was polled by request of Foreman Somers as on yesterday. Eleven of the men said they found for the defendant. When Clerk Clarke reached Edward Burns, the Syracuse motorman, the spectators held their breaths. Burns was the man who yesterday "spilled the beans" by declaring himself for Barnes after Foreman Somers had said that the twelve men were agreed for the defendant, providing the court costs were split.

"I find for the defendant," said Burns.

Immediately the jurors exchanged glances and there was an audible sigh of relief from every person in the court room.

ROOSEVELT SHAKES HANDS.

The poll being completed, Justice Andrews accepted the verdict for Colonel Roosevelt and thanked the jurors for their five weeks of service.

Colonel Roosevelt shook hands with John Bowers, his chief counsel, and with the rest of his legal battery and the scores of Syracuse women and men who crowded to the rail. Barnes was represented in the court only by Henry Felix Wolff of William M. Ivins' office and W. L. Barnum, his local counsel.

After court adjourned John M. Bowers made a statement with Colonel Roosevelt's entire approval.

"That is all I care to say or authorize to be said on this case," said Roosevelt.

Just before the jury was called at 10:05 Wolff moved that a mistrial be ordered because of the public polling of the jury yesterday.

"The secrecy of the jury room have been violated" said Wolff, "and we ask a mistrial."

"Motion denied," said Justice Andrews, and the jury was called in. After Somers said "We find for the defendant," the twelve "Good men and true," were polled. Wolff made the formal motion that the verdict be set aside.

"Motion denied," said Justice Andrews. And the five weeks' $50,000 political law suit was consigned to the limbo of history.

Colonel Roosevelt immediately asked the Court if it would be ethical for him to thank the jury.

"Does that include Mr. Burns?" asked one of the Roosevelt counsel.

"It includes everybody that has had anything to do with this case," grinned the Colonel.

When Colonel Roosevelt met the jurors in the ante room he shook hands all around, paying marked attention to the recalcitrant Edward Burns and Foreman Somers. He then squared off and said: "Gentlemen of the jury, I thank you. This is a typical American verdict. I am more gratified than I am able to express. I am especially gratified because the verdict came from a jury composed of men of practically all political parties.

"You gentlemen have imposed upon me an obligation which I will never forget, and you have performed a service which you never in all your lives will have cause to regret."

COLONEL ROOSEVELT WITH JURY.

The crowd filled the small anteroom and the photographer said his camera was not big enough to take the crowd.

"All those who are not my friends," said the Colonel, "will please step one side."

No one budged.

"Will everybody but the jury stand to one side," asked Mr. Roosevelt.

The picture then was taken and the Colonel with his faithful Bowers departed for the home of Horace Wilkinson, his host during the siege, where he made arrangements for returning to Oyster Bay.

In the corridors, the elevator, on the street, the victor in this most amazing law suit received one ovation after another. His bodyguard fairly fought to get Roosevelt in his limousine.

Mr. Barnes was informed of the verdict by long distance telephone by Barnum. Barnum refused to say whether his client made any comment. It was 10:35 before the crowd finally cleared from the court room where for exactly five weeks they had watched the greatest political contest in history.

"GOOD GOVERNMENT VICTORY."

"The victory that Mr. Roosevelt won is a victory for good government," said Bowers. "The issue put to the jury was whether machine government or government by the people should prevail and the latter has prevailed. The article in suit was held by the court to be libelous in two respects.

"First—Because it charged a corrupt political alliance between William Barnes and Charles F. Murphy.

"Second — Because the article charged that the plaintiff had worked through such alliance between crooked business and crooked politics.

"It is impossible to determine at this time the far-reaching extent of the verdict for good government."

After the excitement died down Foreman Warren W. Somers told the story of the forty odd hours in the jury room.

"We took forty ballots," Somers said. "On the first ballot we stood eleven to one, Edward Burns standing out for Mr. Barnes.

"The other eleven men were for the defendant all the time. The last ballot was taken today after breakfast, when Mr. Barnes came over."

Colonel Roosevelt left Syracuse in triumph at 12:45 for Oyster Bay. He said:

"I am going home. I shall do my best to keep out of the limelight for some time to come. I do not expect to be interviewed or make any public statement on my subject for some time to come."

Vincent Astor May Be Won to the North Shore

Last week's visit of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor to Ware Farm, a famous estate on the old turnpike road between Salem and Lynn, is believed by North Shore residents to portend the coming of the Astors to the North Shore colony this summer.

The Astors appeared much pleased with what they saw at the farm, their visit having been made in company with W. Starling Burgess, the flathichead aeroplane builder.

BUGLE CALL TO SUMMON SENIORS

Picnic of Harvard 1915, Financed by Freshmen, Set Down for Wednesday.

Wednesday will prove a gala day in the college history of the class of 1915 at Harvard for it is the date of the senior picnic the funds for which were squeezed out of the combined freshman pocketbooks by both classes had their class shows. graphs taken last month. The men of 1915 "dug deep" for it and the money will go to help the seniors to have a high old time on Wednesday.

At 6 o'clock tomorrow, a trumpet will pass through the yard and with his clarion sound the "all ye and out!"

Each fellow will slip into white duck, hold a white sailor hat over his brow and trek for the Widener Memorial Library stairway, where photograph of the Junketers will be snapped. Armed with cups, baseball bats, sea sickness cures and things like that, the party will board five special cars in Harvard square and with John F. Carroll in the "Yard" cop as chaperon, pleniputentiary, will proceed briskly to City Point, a most unusual proceeding for a bon vivs Senior class.

When the Point has been reached, Wally Tebbutt, first marshal of the class of 1915, Archfield, the chief on the committee of arrangements, Stan Pennock, football star, Fred Bradley, college gridiron favorite and Johnny Fleck, hockey manager will confer once to see that no men have been lost so far.

At the Marine Park landing two launches, the Alpha and the Atlanta, will be waiting, and the band from Nix Mate's Land, composed of fifteen pieces will play up moving picture harmonies as the two boats race for the unnamed end of the journey. As the committee says, the party will follow the "Will o' the Wisp," being all drawn up, with no particular place to go. Peddock's Island, where the picnic have been held for several years, has been passed up in favor of the closely guarded new seashore haven.

Once on land, the festivities will begin. There will be all sorts of athletic events, including a potato race. A shot put with paper bags as weights is apt to be one of the features of the picnic and throwing the feather another. Thayer and Matthews Hall will combine and play baseball game from Hollis, Stoughton and Holworthy.

After the days' outing the seniors will return to Boston in their crafts and straggle go-as-you-please back to Harvard.

Some enterprising freshman put across a "phoney" check on the wealthy class, relative to "dig up" day, so the returning loungers must each produce to the extent of a "jitney" in order to reach their native lairs.

Melrose Eggs Prove to Be Bad Bouncers

Eggs took a big drop, literally and otherwise, at the Melrose market case containing thirty dozen of new bounced off an express wagon driven down Fields court by Sidney Lawrence, the owner.

The mishap was due to a sudden starting of the horse. The result was just what might be expected. The dropped eggs quickly became scrambled eggs, and the scrambled eggs soon became an omelet.

Mr. Lawrence doesn't think he's a bit sentimental when he says he wouldn't have happened if he'd only known the antics of that horse as he has for a score years back.

As it was he saved just twelve of the thirty dozen that set out and escaped.

Fifty Brides on Canal Voyage to San Francisco

NEW YORK, May 22.—With fifty brides among her 150 passengers, the honeymoon ship Kronland went down the North river today on her way to San Francisco via the Panama Canal.

The Kronland was formerly a Red Star liner in the transatlantic trade. She is now of the Scandinavian line and is the second vessel of the line to make the New York-San Francisco trip. The Finland sailed, having reached the golden state by the Panama route and the Atlanta, will be waiting, and the band from Nix Mate's Land, composed of fifteen pieces will play up moving picture harmonies as the two boats race for the unnamed end of the journey. As the committee says, the party will follow the "Will o' the Wisp," being all drawn up, with no particular place to go. Peddock's Island, where the picnic have been held for several years, has been passed up in favor of the closely guarded new seashore haven.

SHAW CONFIRMED DESPITE ATTACKS

The Civil Service Commission has unanimously confirmed the appointment of Mr. Shaw as a member of the commission of David B. Shaw, who was originally confirmed by the Finance Commission in a report made public on

When the news of the unanimous action by the Civil Service Commission reached the ears of Mr. Shaw, he was pleased to friends of Mr. Shaw that the attack on the Finance Commission in connection with the confirmation of Mr. Shaw's appointment would not affect the Finance Commission in any way.

Mayor Curley was pleased Mr. Shaw as Acting Penal Institutions Commissioner for a period of seven several weeks ago, and then sent in his name for permanent appointment on April 24, the Finance Commission, with a protest. This was the first time in over eighty appointments that the Civil Service Commission had refused to confirm. Mayor Curley was pleased to learn that the Finance Commission had withdrawn its opposition to Mr. Shaw's confirmation and that the Civil Service Commission had confirmed him.

John B. Maguire, chairman of the Finance Commission, explained that the commission had withdrawn its opposition to Mr. Shaw's confirmation because it had been informed that Mr. Shaw's brothers-in-law had not been employed on Deer Island since Mr. Shaw was appointed Monitor was dropped from $1,400 to $1,200 soon after Mr. Shaw was appointed.

That Shaw was served on Deer Island before his appointment as Monitor was also brought without advertising bids from a company whose treasurer is a brother-in-law of Mr. Shaw.

That a woman clerk formerly in the Civil Service Commission office and also in the Finance Commission office and was still doing some of Mr. Shaw's private work was employed at Deer Island were also secured heavily.

There Is But One GIBSON METHOD

Bedbugs Are Prevalent

There are bugs and bugs, but the last word in the bug category is bedbugs. Other bugs may be offensive, but not bedbugs—never. Any person who has had the misfortune of these pests to visit his or her home need not be told that there isn't a bug in existence that is half as disgusting as this one tiny animal. They are so repugnant to our senses that we instinctively recoil from the very mention of the word. In the days of old it was a token of the highest favor for a king to bestow the honor of a visit from the ravages of this pest.

Royalty in ancient times was supposed to have official bedbug catchers, who sat beside the bright couch and caught them as they came with a pin as they crawled forth.

Even in modern times the bugs now did terrible havoc in many homes before the discovery of Hallingh Bedbugs are rarely prevalent today. When they were in former times, there was no come to the aid of the afflicted and no person, no matter what his station in life need endure their torments any longer. They can be exterminated today, and that, too, with little effort and small expense. Thanks to Martin's Bedbug Powders, civilization can now step in and crush out this evil.

The splendid product of a man who made a specific that would make a precaution that would kill all the bedbugs, and still be safe, non-poisonous and odorless, has thereby benefited from further annoyance from bedbugs. If no bedbugs in your domicile or place of business, it is your own fault. Martin's Bedbug Powders are guaranteed to clean them out of your place, if applied according to instructions.

Write for free booklet telling all about them, where to buy and how to use the extra fine. Three different powders for other pests; same and then ordering.

New Harvard Prodigy Gets 6 'Mash Notes'

Harvard's youngest student, Louis Keane, the fifteen-year-old freshman who but recently donned his first pair of long trousers, now can't look a postman in the face without blushing. There's a reason. It's—to tell the sweet-scented truth—mash-notes.

Since they started to come but a few days ago, Louis has received just four of them. Three were mailed from the western part of Massachusetts. The others were written by romantic young maids in Georgia, Virginia and Wisconsin. Two of the missives were accompanied by photographs of the writers.

Young Keane, who is the son of Thomas J. Keane of No. 104 Highland avenue, Dorchester, attributes this shower of affectionate missives to a recent publication of a photograph showing him in his first pair of long trousers.

The first letter was received at the Keane home four days ago. Needless to say young Mr. Keane read it with mingled blushes and surprise. His blushes and surprise both increased, however, when the other five notes followed with a rapidity that would exceed even the fondest wishes of a cheru girl.

What did he do with them? Sh! The stove.

Unusual Demonstration Marks the Opening of Three-Day Convention in Boston.

Commander Eva Booth of the Salvation Army yesterday headed a parade of ten detachments of army workers through Boston's streets in one of the largest Salvation Army pilgrimages ever seen here. The occasion was in connection with the three-day convention of the New England workers, which opened yesterday with the parade and meetings during the day and last night and which will continue today with services at the army headquarters.

Heading the procession, the Salvation leader, in blue uniform with scarlet banded hat and accompanied by Colonel W. Peart and Major E. Griffiths as aids, made a striking picture, mounted on a bay horse.

Thousand of spectators lined the route of the parade, watching the procession as it proceeded from Westerly Newton street to Columbus avenue, to Charles, Beacon and Tremont streets, and finally to the area around the Common. Parkman bandstand, where thousands more were waiting to watch the ceremonies and listen to the concert.

Ten brass bands, one for each company, featured the marching line, which extended over a mile. The New Bedford life saving boy scouts and a detachment of scarlet-capped girls from South Manchester, Ct., formed interesting detachments.

There was an impressive ceremony at the State House, where the commander halted with her aids and assisted reviewing the procession. Traffic practically came to a standstill during the parade.

WIN VICTORY IN FIGHT FOR BETTER STREETS IN BOSTON

And there was still another glad note.

Captain Dillon, chairman of the Park and Recreation department, informed Mayor Curley that by June 7 all the park roadways from the Pierhead at City Point, South Boston, to Charlesgate West will be in first-class condition.

A GOOD BEGINNING.

Well and good. Very much so, in fact. If a similar good news is soon heard of the tip-top condition of other Boston streets by June 7, it will be cause for congratulation indeed.

There is no reason why they shouldn't be put into first class condition.

There is every reason why they should be.

The AMERICAN began its campaign for street improvements with that in mind. There is every reason why the city's streets should be improved, and at once.

The AMERICAN printed photographs of these streets. The AMERICAN called for ACTION, united action, immediate action.

Mayor Curley in a statement hailed the AMERICAN'S efforts to better the streets as a splendid move. He said:

"No better work was ever undertaken than that of the AMERICAN in its attempt to give Boston the best streets in the world. I was very much impressed with the eloquent way in which the AMERICAN approached this great problem, and I am deeply indebted to the management for the fair-minded way in which the case has been presented to the public.

"To me the one thing necessary to put our streets in first class condition is sufficient money to do the work. I shall follow very closely the AMERICAN'S work in this direction and, as Mayor of the city, shall give due consideration to every solution offered by any citizen as presented through the columns of the AMERICAN in the near future.

"This is a work in which all can help by constructive advice. An citizen with a common interest at heart, we should not waste time in attempting to criticise those whose negligence appears to have brought about the deplorable conditions now existing on our streets, but we should face the situation as it exists and determine how best the money can be raised to place all our streets in a proper condition.

MUST RAISE MONEY.

"How shall we raise that money?

"That is question for the citizens themselves to decide."

The Mayor has placed four streets and squares in a "roll of dishonor," as the worst streets in the city: Summer, Boylston and Courts streets and Scollay square.

These are streets which have been torn up as a result of the subway construction and have not yet been repaired.

On Summer street the Elevated is in duty bound to repave between the car tracks. The Transit Commission must look after the rest of the street.

ELEVATED HAS DUTY.

"The Elevated liability is only to pave the space between the car tracks," said President Bancroft to an AMERICAN reporter yesterday. "This is on paved streets. On unpaved streets the company has to look out for the space between the tracks and eighteen inches on either side of the tracks."

President Bancroft said there were three things to be considered in the work: The part of the Transit Commission, the settling of the earth under the street following subway construction, and the finances of the Elevated.

Asked if the "El" was willing to begin its part of the work at once pending the Transit Commission was ready for immediate action, President Bancroft said:

"The Elevated is always responsible for a portion of the paving in such cases. It recognizes this responsibility wherever there is any dangerous condition or any likelihood of such condition existing likelihood of such condition existing.

DO WORK PROMPTLY.

"We are always prompt to remedy dangerous conditions does not mean that the Transit Commission may not take charge of the street and in the course of its work make conditions that are uncomfortable, to say the least.

"But on streets where this is not the case, we are prompt to meet our responsibility."

Chairman Swan, when told of the action of President Bancroft at the latter's conference with the Mayor, said:

"If the Elevated starts work on Summer street next Saturday, this Commission will do its share at the same time.

"We will start work as soon as the Elevated begins. We have awarded the contract, and are ready to start when the Elevated does."

OTHER STREETS SOON.

"We will start the repair work on Boylston street soon—in two or three weeks. Later we shall begin the work on Court street. As soon as practicable we shall begin on Scollay square."

This is good, but it is not all. The city of Boston has much to do.

This means that YOU have much to do. You, Mr. and Mrs. Bostonian, can help and must help if this campaign is to be successful to gifting Boston the best streets of any city in the country.

Action is needed. It must be united action, and it must be immediate action.

Much of Boston's street mileage—the city has 584 miles of streets—is in a disgraceful condition. You know it; everybody knows it. It is the talk of the city. Unless Boston gets onto herself and applies the proper remedy, it will be the talk of other cities. Boston's streets will bring her into disrepute.

STREETS FRAZZLED OUT.

"There are miles of streets which seemingly have just frazzled out. There are whole blocks so filled with holes as to make motoring as exciting as "bumping the lumps" at the amusement parks.

Danger lurks in these holes.

The other day a well-known citizen driving along one street in the Back Bay drew the rein to turn his horse. The animal stepped into one of the numerous bowl-like cavities so frequently seen in the streets.

The horse's leg was broken in three places and they summoned a policeman to kill the animal.

Numbers of horses have tripped in these holes, and the result is a sprained joint or dislocated hips as a rule. These are of daily occurrence.

MENACE TO HUMANS.

These holes also menace human beings.

There are other streets that are crusted thick with mud. In wet weather, country roads are much better, and when the sun shines, the mud becomes thick dust.

These conditions are so bad that many streets are in reality in places one-way streets. Not because the board of street commissioners have ruled them to be such, but purely because traffic is impossible on one side of the street or the other.

Bostonians are ashamed of the streets.

That is a good sign if it means that each will do all in his power for good streets.

It is a serious matter. Act now. Make your protest emphatic. Make yourself heard. Put a punch in what you have to say.

This is the time to be on the job, city officials, citizens generally. Everybody.

This is the time, too, to begin the job of improving the streets.

The city of Boston's share of general street improvements—this is the Hon's share and the big job that remains to be done—is a matter of money.

At present there is no money to pay for the work. Unless that money is gotten somehow the work cannot be done.

Unless this money is secured, miles on miles of streets will remain as they are, a disgrace to the city and to every citizen.

Mayor Curley wants a $500,000 loan to pay the costs of the necessary street improvements. His order for this loan will come up in the City Council meeting tomorrow.

But just now the street department is about as poor as John Jacob Astor and the streets are in very, very bad shape.

Don't waste any time laying the blame on anybody for the terrible bad streets. As we have said several times before.

The question isn't who's to blame, but who'll take the glory of making the worst streets of any city in the world the best streets of any city in the world.

"Me for 'GETS-IT' When I Have Corns"

Simple as Saying It; Never Fails.

It does your heart good to see how easily and quickly any corn comes out when you put "GETS-IT" on it, then when you've gone along for years trying everything; when you've sat up nights wrapping up your toes in bandages, smearing on salves that rub off or swell up the corn, pasting on cotton plasters that take some pop-eyed, slaughtering your toes with razors, jabbing them with knives and pruning to the quick with scissors—and then you put on 2 drops of "GETS-IT" and see your corn fall right off—why, it just looks like a miracle. Just try it. "GETS-IT" never fails. No pain, no trouble. Use it for any corn, callus, wart or bunion.

Dr. J. Grant Lyman's Daring Amazes All

Broker's Flight Ends Social Career

Investigation yesterday into the meteoric month just spent in Boston by Dr. J. Grant Lyman, the stock swindler, who posed as "Dr. John G. Lorimer," curb broker, showed that Lyman and a woman lived luxuriously as Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Wills" at the Hotel Harvard on Huntington avenue, with champagne, hothouse fruits and other delicacies, up to the time they moved to Beverly, where Lyman had rented a bungalow for the season.

Warren A. Brown, a curb broker, who was victimized into taking Lyman in as partner, now seeks a warrant against the international crook on a charge of stealing a $2,700 check and other funds of the firm. Decision on this application will be made by the court tomorrow morning. The $2,700 check was sent to the firm by a Maine customer to buy stock. The Judge desired to see the letter in which the check was enclosed. Mr. Brown will have the letter and other documents ready for the Court's inspection tomorrow.

"State street" learned from the Boston AMERICAN, in an exclusive story in the AMERICAN'S Sporting Edition Friday afternoon of the reappearance in Boston—and the disappearance again—of Lyman, the world-known swindler. The sheer audacity of the man, returning to a city where he had ensnared scores of victims in 1901, through his "International Zinc" and "Yukon" bubbles, amazed State street. The fellow was here only a month but that was long enough for him to make friends, enter the "street" and even persuade Warren A. Brown, former cashier of the Boston Curb Exchange, to enter partnership with him.

MORE DARING THAN EVER.

Lyman's nerve is shown by his bold use of two names in one city at the same time. He introduced himself as Lorimer to Brown and formed partnership with him. But at the Hotel Harvard he was "C. A. Wills." He even told Clerk Ralph Falk of the hotel that, if a man should call name for "Mr. Lorimer," that he was the party meant.

The identity of "Mrs. Wills" was a source of interested speculation among the hotel people today.

When Lyman eluded the San Francisco police in September, 1911, it was reported that his escape was aided by money funds furnished by Miss Maud Lehman, a New York heiress, who was in the West at the same time, it was said.

QUARTERED AT HOTEL HARVARD.

Lyman and his woman appeared at the Harvard on April 14. He registered as Wills and wife, New York. They took a comfortable suite and lived well. They paid their bills promptly and generously. Their dining room waiter received a dollar or two every other day. The restaurant bills for the two ran as high as $50 a week.

Both were fond of champagne, which they had brought in. It was served at their table and in their rooms as well. In addition to the restaurant bills, "Wills" had many baskets of choice fruit sent in, making the total for food and drink high.

"Mrs. Wills" said that they had a son in London, in care of a nurse. She said she had had an adventurous life and world-wide travel, and her Parisian French, musical gifts, conversational charm and cosmopolitan manner bore out her statement of globe-trotting.

TAKES SEVERE SUMMER PLACE.

Lyman apparently planned for social conquest in this section as well, for he had transferred only a week ago from the Hotel Harvard in the Back Bay to the Sheldon mansion on Atbor street, in aristocratic Beverly, for the summer. There he and the woman who he introduced as his wife, with a maid, were installed for the season.

A golf bag of extra size, stuffed with a fine assortment of clubs, indicated that Lyman planned to get into one of the North Shore country clubs where men of wealth mingle in easy informality.

The house was rented through a Boston real estate agency, which is reported to have received $150 down on a $450 Summer rental. The three jobless sisters, who own the property, put it in shape for the new Summer tenant and then moved to their homestead in North Beverly.

Thursday Mrs. "Lorimer," as she was known, left the house with hand baggage. The next day the maid left. Friday night the news of Lyman's exposure, as told in the AMERICAN, caused a sensation in Beverly. Miss Abbie Sheldon, one of the sisters, went to the house yesterday morning. She found a curt note from "Lorimer," saying that his wife had suddenly been called home and he was giving up the house.

When Lyman was first arrested fourteen years ago in New York he was married, but "Mrs. Mills" of this time does not answer the description of the original Mrs. Lyman.

Lyman, or "Lorimer," did not scorn at the Harvard to sell $10 worth of zinc stock to a barber and other shares to customers in the barber shop.

On State street he had completely won Brown's confidence. Even when a State Streeter remembered "Lorimer" as Lyman and told Brown, the latter refused to believe it.

It was not until Wednesday, when Brown happened to learn that the $2,700 check from Maine had been cashed by "Lorimer" instead of deposited, that he became suspicious, began an investigation, found "Lorimer" had skipped and then went to the police.

UNITARIANS TO ANSWER SUNDAY

The attitude of Unitarians toward "Billy" Sunday will be declared in many pulpits of that denomination today, which is the beginning of Anniversary week.

The first meeting of importance will be the public one this evening of the Unitarian Fellowship For Social Justice, at the South Congregational Church, at which replies may be expected Sunday's tirade against Unitarianism.

The speakers will be Rev. A. Robinson of Newton Centre, Rev. Everett D. Martin of Des Moines, Ia., on "The Social Factors of Pragmatism" in which the speaker is expected to handle some of the methods of Sunday's recent campaign in Patterson, N. J. Rev. Elizabeth Padgham of Rutherford, N. J., will make an address on "The Economic Value of Woman in the Home."

Tomorrow the ministers will gather in Channing Hall to hear an address by Rev. William C. Gannett of Rochester, N. Y.

The women of the denomination will meet in the South Congregational Church at 2.30 p. m. and outline their work for another year.

GLYNN GETS PRIVILEGE.

Privilege to sell refreshments at Castle Island was granted to Thomas F. Glynn of Jamaica Plain at $1,600 for the year, in competition with several other bidders, under an order approved by Mayor Curley yesterday.

Funeral Services for Rev. N. K. Bishop

The funeral of the Rev. Nathan K. Bishop, late rector of Emmanuel Episcopal Church of Somerville and dean of Somerville's Protestant clergymen, was held at the church. Many prominent clergymen, including Bishop Lawrence, were present. Hourly services were held, under the direction of Rev. Francis W. Webster of Waltham, conducted by Rev. Andrew Edward Scott of Brownsville Junction, Me.; Rev. William Henry Pettus of Somerville, Rev. F. W. Fitts of Roxbury and Rev. H. B. LeFerre of New York. At the final services Bishop Lawrence officiated, assisted by Rev. F. W. Fitts and Rev. Andrew Edward Scott. The honorary bearers were Cutler C. Crowell, David W. Weaver, Albert R. Fales, John W. Colwill, Daniel W. Webster and Harry A. Cox. Interment will be at Greenport, Long Island.

Harvard '09 Outing at Mystery Island

BEVERLY, May 22.—Forty members of the Harvard class of 1906 held their annual outing and jollification on Mystery Island, off Beverly Farms today. The party arrived by train and went to the island in a fleet of motor boats. A program of sports, including a baseball game, occupied the afternoon. In the evening the class dinner was held at the casino. The outing was in charge of Gordan Meade, president of the class.

LYNN BRIDE ELECT MISSING

Miss Nettie H. Haskell, twenty years old, of No. 12 Elmore street, Lynn, who was to be married to Guy E. Wardwell, a master machinist of Waltham, Friday night, is missing, according to Rev. Charles Shattuck of the First Advent Church, Lynn, who was to perform the ceremony.

"I had been engaged to perform the marriage ceremony," said Rev. Mr. Shattuck, "and when I went to Miss Haskell's home I was told she disappeared on Tuesday. That is all I know."

Though the parents of Miss Haskell declare there was to be no ceremony, neighbors declared a caterer had arranged a wedding supper for the guests, and that a decorator had decorated the house.

"We saw the minister enter the house," said a resident of Elmore street. "In addition, we saw the house lighted up and got a glimpse of the decorations. We saw the caterer's wagon at the door and saw the guests enter."

Friends of Miss Haskell declare she is now with the parents of a schoolday sweetheart in Lynn.

Miss Haskell is active in the social affairs of the Good Templars in Lynn. She is very pretty.

$5,450 Per Day Spent To Fortify Goodyear Tires

The other day we cited our experts to certain well-known tires. And we asked, What could Goodyear save by building tires like these?

$1,635,000 a Year

The answer was, "Based on current production, our saving would be $1,635,000 per year." That means $5,450 per day.

But the saving would probably cost our users a million dollars monthly. And the cost to Goodyear soon would be the rulership of Tiredom.

One Must Choose

Here's the choice that confronts us day after day: Shall we skimp Goodyear tires in ways that can't be seen, and increase our profit $1,635,000 a year? Or shall we pay that price to give our users a better tire than others?

Our answer is this:

We spend on experts $100,000 yearly to find new betterments to add.

In the past year alone we have added improvements which cost us exceeding $500,000 a year.

Those are the facts; believe them.

Price Reductions

Now note another side.

Despite this ceaseless improvement, Goodyear prices are constantly coming down. Our last big reduction—on February 1st—made three in two years, totaling 45 per cent.

Yet not a feature is missing, not an item is skimped. And this year we are spending a half-million dollars on newly-adopted betterments.

That's one result of our mammoth output, our new equipment and our modern methods.

When we spend such sums to build tires better than rivals, don't you think it worth while to get Goodyears?

Most men do. Goodyear tires are selling now much faster than we can build them.

Any dealer will supply you.

ASK HEARING ON PHOTOPLAY

Opponents of "Birth of Nation" Say Mayor Is "Cornered," Under New Law.

The colored people of Boston who seek to drive "The Birth of a Nation" out of the city on the plea that it ridicules their race, claim they have Mayor Curley cornered by the passage of the new censorship law.

They say he can no longer hedge behind the excuse of "insufficient law." They have asked the new board of censors, Police Commissioner O'Meara, Chief Inspector Bolster of the Boston Police Department and Mayor Curley for a hearing, to vent their objections to the photoplay which deals with the reconstruction period in the South following the Civil War.

A formal petition was filed yesterday by former Assistant United States Attorney General Lewis J. Feller R. Wilson and J. Mott Hallowell, acting as counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The new censors have not yet fixed a date, but the opposition feel confident they will be given an inning next week.

MANAGER STALLINGS DISCUSSES THE BASEBALL SITUATION

In a Highly Interesting Statement the Miracle Man Tells How Feds Have Hurt Game, and Makes a Few Remarks About the Braves

WARD IS MONEY MAN OF GREAT FEDERAL WAR

Boss of Champions Says Brookfed's Owner Is Being Used as a "Sucker."

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

"Baseball is temporarily overcome by the fumes of the Federal League. Baseball has not been torpedoed, nor has it been sunk by a submarine. The Feds have used asphyxiating gas, and it has poisoned the minds of the baseball public—for the time being—that is what ails baseball, in my opinion."

"There was no demand for the Federal League, but a bunch of promoters got together, enticed many players to break their contract with clubs in organized baseball, tempted many others with glittering offers, disturbed the morale of the game and turned things topsy-turvy.

"What was the result? The high class, intelligent baseball 'fan' became disgusted. The player whom he thought was the soul of honor and whom he loved for his fine athletic qualities, proved to be 'out for the stuff,' and jumped his solemn contract. The newspapers were full of players jumping to the Feds and flirting with them and holding up their own clubs for as much as they could pull out of them.

"Fans" Turned Against the National Pastime.

"The high-class, intelligent 'fan' read of these things and he turned against baseball. The general problem throughout the country now is to win that fellow back.

"In the meantime the Federal League is playing ball, but playing to empty benches. In Buffalo, where they made a fair start last season, the promoters behind the club are now ready to quit. They threaten that unless the public of Buffalo turns out in paying numbers the club will be transferred to some other city. But where will the club go? What city wants it? They are playing to a handful of spectators in Buffalo and losing money hand over fist.

"In Brooklyn, where the 'money man' of the Federal League operates a club, they are not taking in enough money to pay the ticket sellers. In Baltimore, where they welcomed the Feds with brass bands last year, they have quit to practically nothing.

"Ward Being Used as 'Sucker' by Promoters."

"The attendance at the St. Louis Federal League games is a joke. In Chicago, the great work this year by the Cubs and White Sox has completely eclipsed the Federal League, and Mr. Weegham, the lunchroom man, who operates the Federal club there, can carry home a day's baseball receipts in his vest pocket.

"In Kansas City the Feds are done, and in Pittsburgh, where the present leaders of the league hold forth, the crowds are pitifully small. They built new grounds at Newark this year and placed a club there. They are not drawing flies, although the mosquitos are plentiful enough.

"Now mark what I tell you: Mr. Ward of Brooklyn, the man who has furnished thousands and thousands of dollars to back the Federal League, will before long tumble to the fact that he has been furnishing jobs for a lot of adventurers. He will find out that he is what is known as a 'sucker.' No man who finds out he is a 'sucker' will continue in that capacity. Mr. Ward will quit, and that will be the end of the Federal League."

Stallings does not do his talking with one foot on a brass rail nor at a table in a cafe. He lives at a well-known hotel very quietly, and for the most part is in bed by 9 o'clock every night. He was seated on a divan in the lobby when he delivered the foregoing broadside at the Federal League.

"But," he continued, "there are other causes for the temporary unsettled condition in baseball. The war is a factor. Some men I know—baseball 'fans'—who used to spend a hundred dollars now spend ten. In my country, down South, the men who spent ten dollars do not spend ten cents. These things, however, are rapidly righting themselves.

"Here in Boston our two teams have not been going well. But let the Braves and the Red Sox get up in front with a winning streak and the crowds will come—not in such great numbers as formerly, perhaps, but very nearly so, just as any amusement is patronized when things are right."

The Miracle Man paused. It would have been a good time for him to flick the ashes from his cigar, take a long, slow puff and blow rings in the air. But he doesn't smoke.

"Getting back to the Feds," Stallings went on, "they haven't affected my club a bit. I lost a couple of players to them last Winter, but it hasn't weakened the Braves. And there is this to be said: A year ago this time the players that had jumped to the outlaw organization were the cockiest bunch you ever saw. This year they are as tame as old hens. There isn't one of them but would give anything he possesses to get back into organized baseball. They are continually coming around trying to square themselves so they can get a job on their old club when the Federal League blowoff comes.

"Yes, sir, Mr. Ward of Brooklyn will wake up some day soon and say, 'I'm through putting up for a gang of promoters. I'm a sucker.' And, I repeat, when a man is convinced that he is a 'sucker' he quits.

"Miracle Man" Discusses Playing of Champions.

"The adventurers of the Federal League have succeeded in getting one of their men placed on the payroll of the Brooklyn Federal League club, so that he can 'tip off' as to what Mr. Ward is doing, how he feels, how the wind is blowing and so on. In short, this man is privately piping off Mr. Ward for the benefit of the gang, so that they can be posted and keep the 'money man' jollied along. But Mr. Ward will wake up; you see if he don't. Now, then, let's talk about something more pleasant."

"Are the Braves a pleasant topic just now?" we [illegible]

He can't [illegible] hold a ball now and cannot even go up to bat for me in a pinch. Paul Strand, a young fellow, who ought never to have a sore arm at his age, suddenly gets a sore arm, how or why, I don't know. I could have used this boy in recent games to good advantage.

"Yes, sir, they've accused me of about everything. When I was managing the New York Americans, they accused me of maintaining a signal-tipping plant out in centre field. I bet you think so. The result was they were spending all their time trying to locate the alleged signal-tipping plant and I was winning all the ball games.

Stallings looked at his watch. It was getting on toward 9 o'clock.

"How about the pennant; are [illegible] going to win it?" I [illegible] replied.

The Chicago Sox got to this pair for fourteen hits for a total of twenty bases, with John Collins in the part of the slugger-in-chief Collins, in five trips to the plate, hammered out a single, a double and a triple and was robbed of another extra base hit by a wonderful running catch by Duffy Lewis

Felsch, with a single and a double Roth with a single and triple, Eddie Collins with a pair of base hits, and Buck Weaver with two safe licks, were among the Chicagoans who made life a burdensome miserable for the Boston twirlers

ALONG GOES RUTH.

It would be difficult to determine whether Ruth or Ray Collins was the worst. The former started and lasted a trifle more than one inning. Four runs and six hits were made while he adorned the mint.

Benz was far from effective and the Red Sox would have had a great chance in an ordinary game. They made Benz work for his every base on balls, but was none the less effective when the Chicagoans were getting their runs in clusters.

Hoblitzell was injured and compelled to retire from the game. It has not yet been determined definitely how serious the injury to his foot, the sinking cut in through the shoe. A small artery was severed

SCORING BEGINS.

Ruth was in hot water from the time he pitched the first ball. He passed Felsch, Felsch stole second and Roth then hit a hounder back at

Ray Collins succeeded him. Eddie Collins shot a single to right and Felsch counted Then Collins settled and there was nothing more doing in this session

The third was barren and the Red Sox accumulated another opportunity in the first half of the fourth. Weaver's error gave both Jamieson and Thomas a life. Jamieson hit out another notch and fanned both Ray Collins and Gainer.

MORE RUNS COME IN.

Hoblitzell and Shean singled off Ray Collins. They pounded him for five runs and four hits and the Red Sox played havoc with a pitching assortment.

Benz singled and Felsch walked Weaver took Roth's bounder and toned late to force Felsch and the bases were filled. Eddie Collins singled to right and two White Sox runs in.

The Red Sox put one over in the fifth on a single by Warner, a double by Speaker and the infield out of Lewis.

The Chicago Sox, however, overlooked an opportunity in their half A pass to Schalk and a double by Felsch put the runners on second and third with only one gone, but Ruth Eddie Collins' sacrifice fly.

The White Sox continued their bombardment in the sixth, but got nowhere. Fournier opened with a single and J. Collins drove out a double. Then Ray Collins began to pitch. He retired the side without a run

Although Dartmouth was successful in its quest for the New England Intercollegiate Athletic Association championships yesterday afternoon on the new Tech field, Cambridge, the boys from Hanover failed to win by as large a margin as was predicted.

Dartmouth totaled 36 1-3 points, while the University of Maine finished with 31 points to its credit. Jackie Magee's athletes from Bowdoin took third place with 20 5-6 points, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was fourth.

The Dartmouth [illegible] badly in the [illegible] hurdles. W. M. [illegible] the Dartmouth half-miler, was [illegible] almost a sure winner, but the best he could do was to win two points by finishing second.

Kenneth Tucker, [illegible] counted upon to win the pole vault, was unable to do better than third in the mile, while Dan [illegible], who won the 120 h.h. hurdle event last year, was easily beaten by W. A. Savage of Bowdoin.

TWO RECORDS GO.

There were two records broken during the afternoon. Captain Larry Whitney of the Dartmouth team tossed the 16-pound shot 47ft. 10in., which wiped out his mark of 45ft. 8in. by almost two feet. This is the first time since entering college that Whitney has displayed form equal to that of his schoolboy days.

Harry T. Worthington, also of Dartmouth, set up a new mark in the running [illegible] yards when he [illegible] from the [illegible] finish. When [illegible] from the [illegible] in 4 3-5 seconds [illegible] the [illegible] Howe.

INDIVIDUAL STARS.

THREE HUNDRED MOTOR CARS ARE GREATLY NEEDED

The motor owners of this section are urgently requested to donate the use of their cars for one day to a most worthy cause—that of assisting the advancement of the plans to entertain 1,800 crippled and orphaned children of Boston

Three hundred motor cars and $1,000 in cash in addition to the money and cars already subscribed are needed to accommodate the children that have been invited to the annual outing given at Nantasket Beach Wednesday, June 3, under the auspices of the Boston Automobile Dealers' Association. Over five hundred cars will be required to transport the children and their attendants on this trip to the beach.

Mayor Chester I. Campbell of Quincy, who has so successfully managed this outing for the past eight years, states that while the appeal that he has sent out to motor car owners has brought good results, yet the money subscribed and the cars that have been pledged up to date will not accommodate one-third of the children who have been invited.

"I doubt if there is an owner of a motor car in greater Boston who wouldn't loan his car and a driver for this occasion if he fully realized the happiness that comes to these children who attend the outing," declares Mayor Campbell. "These unfortunate shut-ins rarely set outside the four walls of the institutions in which they are housed, and their pent-up enthusiasm runs riot when they start on this memorable day.

"We have sent invitations to about twenty different charitable institutions in Greater Boston, including all religious denominations and our list totals nearly 1,800 children. If we are obliged to leave any of these children at home because of the lack of cars and funds it will be a sad blow to these unfortunates.

Mayor Campbell states that he will be very happy to receive contributions of cash or the pledge of the loan of a car and driver from any charitably inclined persons. He states that by telephoning Oxford 3700 that complete details of the outing will be supplied. All contributions should be sent to Peter J. Campbell, No 5 Parker St., Boston.

Among those who have donated cars are John W. Alley, Jr., Malcolm R. H. Bain, Lucy B. Bardo, Nelson S. Bartlett, Bay State Dairy Company, H. L. Bean, James Beaudwin, Mrs Ella J. Boggs, J. W. WHITE MOUNTAINS MOTORISTS' MECCA

Of the many touring sections in New England that are visited by thousands of motorists from the South and West every season, the White Mountains are the most popular. They are surrounded by the charm of three near-by groups of the Appalachian system, the central of which is called the Presidential Range because of its seven peaks named after the early presidents, including Prolastic Mount Washington.

The most beautiful drives, walks, and camping in the White Mountains are described in various complete guide books, particularly that of the Appalachian Mountain Club that has done so much for this section in its forty-five years of active work.

Mount Washington is regarded as the most notable peak east of the Rockies, affording sublime views, particularly at sunrise and sunset, from its summit of 6,293 feet. The ascent is made by cog-rail, by automobile, or on foot, from Bretton Woods.

To the south is Crawford Notch, with its turbulent Saco River, named for an early settler, as is also Mount Tom. Crawford, Crawford, to whom a monument has been erected near the Mount Washington House, was the proprietor of the old Notch House, at the entrance to the Notch, which was burned in 1886.

The narrowest part of the pass is the cliff of the Elephant's Head, and at the summit of the pass is the watershed divide between Long Island Sound and the Maine coast.

Nearby is Mount Field, named for Darby Field who, in 1642, made the first known ascent of Mount Washington. Beyond is Mount Willey, famous for the avalanche which destroyed the Willey family in 1826.

As one tours throughout this section there are found scenic views, historic places and legends on every hand. Among the interesting points to name only a few, are the Silver Cascades, Dismal Pool, the Flume, the Pulpit and the Devil's Den.

Motorists from the West traverse New York State roads extending from Buffalo to Albany, where they either enter Mass. boards or turn Eastward through Manchester, Vermont, and then proceed up the Connecticut River valley.

From the south the favorite road is from New York City, with its many cuts, up the valley of the Hudson, Housatonic and Naugatuck rivers.

From lower New England points there are several routes leading almost directly to the White Mountains or through Boston, Portsmouth and Portland and thence to Bretton Woods.

New Hampshire recognizes the importance of touring and her plans for improving the roads have done everything possible to put the main roads in first class condition for automobile travel. No region in the country has been given more attention by the publishers of automobile road maps and route descriptions, so it is an easy matter for tourists to provide themselves with all necessary guide books not only of the White Mountain section itself, but also from parts of the Eastern States to the main routes leading into the great scenic region.

The grandeur of the White Mountain scenery, the exhilarating atmosphere, the good roads, good hotels and garage accommodations, excellent fishing and the peace and quiet of this remote—almost wild—section are the perennial requirement for all motorists who can do so to make at least one tour to Mount Washington every year.

Takes Over the Distribution of Buick Motor Cars

Harry K. Noyes, Head of the Noyes-Buick Co.

One of the largest individual transactions that has been experienced in the New England motor world was completed the first of the past week when Harry K. Noyes made a contract with the Buick Motor Company of Flint, Michigan, whereby he takes over, under the firm name of The Noyes-Buick Co., the [illegible] Buick agency for [illegible] New England.

[illegible] does not in the slightest degree disturb the former business affairs in this territory, as Mr. Noyes has for years been the head of the wholesale department of [illegible] and has a personal [illegible] of the various dealers and agents. It simply means simply the continuance of the old business under a new name and further development of the distributing [illegible] which will exert many great an inter organizations of this character, [illegible] only in New England, but throughout the country.

The present wholesale branch on Commission and Lawton streets will be continued, the difference under the new regime will be that the agents will not have to travel day and distances to get into such with the "powers that be," and as a result of the concentration of interest in the city of Boston they will be able to secure fully as efficient, if not speedier, service as in the past.

Mr. Noyes has for seven years been identified with the Buick product and so closely has he been identified with the New England wholesale branch that Noyes and Buick have become inseparable.

Perhaps no one individual in New England has done more to advance [illegible] in [illegible] than Mr. Noyes, and the motor trade as a whole is loathe to see him lay down his work in becoming the greatest distributor of motor cars in New England.

Makes First Trip Over Siskiyou Mts.

Honors will go this year to the Studebaker car as the first automobile to negotiate the perilous early-season trails of the Siskiyou Mountains in running up the coast from San Francisco to Portland.

That car, driven by P. E. Jackson and F. M. O'Neal, arrived in Portland after a six-day run from the Exposition City.

Jackson and O'Neal are Alaskan miners on their way to the now melting North.

They were induced to give the Studebaker the acid test in crossing the Siskiyous and were so well satisfied with the splendid performance of their car that they announced before leaving that their Alaska car would be a Studebaker.

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE

In the greatest asset of every large business concern and can only be acquired by honest, upright dealings and a keen appreciation of the other fellow's interests and desires

The tremendous patronage and the exceedingly large number of properties purchased from this concern by home buyers and investors shows conclusively that the public has the greatest confidence in this concern and that

WE ARE SELLING GOOD PROPERTIES
FOR MUCH BELOW THE MARKET VALUE

We will co-operate with you in every way, thereby adding one more to our long list of satisfied customers. We deal exclusively in our own properties. No brokerage. We buy wholesale in large quantities from banks, mortgage foreclosures, estates, etc., and sell at individual buyers at far lower prices than the individual seller can compete with. ALWAYS OPEN

Our Tenth Anniversary Sale

Ten years ago this month we started in our humble way to enter the used car industry. Our volume of business has increased each year until today we lead and our competitors follow. We have tried to please our customers and to give them as much in value for their money as it was possible to do. In other words, we have followed our motto, "Fair and honest to all," rigidly. Our list of satisfied customers is conclusive proof of the profit of this policy.

"Half down and balance monthly" if desired. We have over 100 cars for you to select from, a few of which we quote below:

GOVERNOR AND MAYOR TO BE AT BIG PARADE

Democrats Present O'Leary Auto and $2,000 In Recognition of Faithful Work of State

Some 200 friends of Michael A. O'Leary, chairman secretary of the Democratic State Committee, gave him a dinner yesterday at the Quincy House, an automobile and $2,000 in money.

Total monetary value of the gifts: Some $4,000.

Total value: Unestimated.

Mayor Curley, who made the presentation speech, said that words were inadequate that could sufficiently express the appreciation with which Mr. O'Leary's services were held by the party workers.

Former Lieutenant-Governor Edward P. Barry said the gifts were trivial expressions of appreciation for O'Leary's untiring work.

Mayor Curley was glad, he said, that party workers like Mr. O'Leary were no longer accused of "pernicious political activities," but were publicly honored.

Immigration Commissioner Henry J. Snellington said that Mr. O'Leary possessed one tribute that was not always conspicuous in political leaders—

Survey of the Port. Joseph A. Maynard and Joseph A. Conry the Russian consul, said that the dust of Mr. O'Leary's new six-cylinder seven-passenger auto would fly in Republican faces.

Mayor O'Leary, introduced as plain "Mike," also spoke. He eulogized President Wilson as "The man of the hour" in the present crisis and Governor Walsh as the "best Governor the State has ever had." He said the smoothly running machine which awaited him outside the door of the hotel typified the units of the Democratic party, welded together by the hands of honest laborers sincerely interested in the welfare of all the people.

The gifts represented voluntary contributions from Democrats all over the State.

The dinner and presentation had no political significance, it was said, although Governor Walsh was introduced as "the best Governor of Massachusetts and in 1916 our United States Senator."

William P. Nickerson, a farmer from Norwood, insisted upon telling the gathered Democrats that Governor Walsh's son of the milk bill was the "wisest and most constructive act done by a Governor in many, many years."

NEWSBOY HOSTS ENLIST MAYOR

MAYOR PROMISES AID.

A committee of the boys went to Mayor Curley for help on the automobile end of the thing. Hippolyte Rubinovitch, Nathan Edelson, Charles Frasca, Samuel Sklar and Benjamin H. Bobrish constituted the committee. The Mayor received them warmly, heard their explanation of their plans and promised that ten city automobiles should be utilized for the need.

But more than ten automobiles are needed. There will be at least 500 children to be transported. Call it 50 automobiles and you will be nearer right.

Ben H. Bobrish is the man to whom your letter offering your automobile should go.

Boston folks are taking hold to help the newsboys give a good time. Lowney has provided 50 boxes of candy. A jeweler is to give trinkets—one for every child. The newsboys themselves will provide a ball game a band concert, vaudeville, lunch, ice cream and the like. Checks are coming in to the committee to go into the fund. The fund is growing as an avalanche grows.

TEN SAMPLE LETTERS.

But the need is tremendous. Here are ten letters received by Mr. Bobrish—all are willing you a fine time, tell you that I am a lame girl and have been on [illegible] me a line I will be very glad

"Yours truly—"

And—

Dear — H. Robinson I saw in the paper where you wanted the names of children to go on your outing. Now there are two children, a boy and a girl. They are so Lonesome for to go. There are seven children in the family, and the mother makes small jobs. These children never go away. [illegible] If they could have some one for once in their lives. Their names are——. I have known them five years or more

"Yours truly—"

Robinson Gems Go to Jeweler

All the money and jewelry found on Lawrence Robinson, who killed Inspector "Tom" Norton in the Boylston Police Station June 15, 1914, and on his pal, Joseph Duddy, who has been extradited to Virginia, will be turned over to Harry J. Hemrich, the jeweler of [illegible] Square, [illegible] Way, under the direction of Martin Brennan. When the cabaret is not holding forth patrons will be regaled by the dansant, where guests may dance. The palm garden orchestra and [illegible] will provide music for these two features.

In the lagoon, outside the palm garden, this season the main attraction will be Alberta, trained polar bears. These huge beasts will perform astounding feats, and as a climax to their performance they shoot the chutes from a height of ninety feet into the lagoon.

Another feature this season will be the hourly concerts on the lagoon stage by Miss Gaby Millette, and every evening there will be a concert by twenty pretty girls.

On the opening night (Saturday) and again on Monday there will be a display of fireworks

BOSTON CARGOES REPORTED SAFE

Chicago Examiner

The convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will be held in Chicago, June 20-24.

Including delegates and visitors, there will probably be seven or eight thousand persons in attendance. This will be the largest advertising convention ever held. There are many important matters to be discussed.

The Chicago Examiner extends a cordial invitation to every one who will attend the convention to inspect the Examiner's great printing plant.

We Would Like to Show You the photographic department, where there are on file over a third of a million negatives

The publicity and promotion department where a half-dozen persons are at work producing trade paper advertisements, circulars, letters and promotion pages that advertise the Examiner to advertisers.

The circulation promotion department, perhaps the most complete in the United States, that always keeps the circulation at a high notch.

The department that solicits "want" advertisements by telephone, so complete that, in a card index system of over a quarter of a million names, a trained clerk can, in fifteen seconds, furnish the name and telephone number of any given residence address in Chicago.

The house physician and surgeon's hospital maintained for the army of Examiner employees.

The stock rooms which have the appearance of a fair-sized store

The file room where there are hundreds of bound volumes of practically all the Chicago papers for 15 years back.

The editorial reference room where over a quarter of a million topics are so accurately filed that any subject can be furnished on a moment's notice

The linotype department where there are 34 machines, always in commission

The gigantic press room where there are eight presses running, all the way from quadruples to octuple.

The circulation department where is recorded on cards, complete name, address and telephone number of every person in Chicago served with the Examiner by office carrier.

The editorial rooms.

And the business office and display advertising department on the first floor.

All visitors will receive a warm welcome. Attendants will spend as much time as desired in conducting visitors through this big publishing house.

Miss Evelyn Sears, New Tennis Champion, to Aid Anti-Suffrage Work

MISS EVELYN SEARS of No. 85 Mount Vernon street, former national tennis champion and winner last week in the women's singles at the Brookline Country Club tournament, will directly aid in the work of the anti-suffrage organization in its Summer campaign.

Miss Sears is chairman of the campaign committee, composed of members from the men's and women's association, which is directing the Summer work.

In addition the tennis star is a director of the National Playground and Recreation Association; she is a member of the Women's Municipal League Council and one of the executive committee of the housing department of the same body, and finally she is treasurer of the Public Interests League, a branch of the Anti-Suffrage Association. The league has raised $15,000 cash for relief work here and abroad this Winter.

Miss Sears is a member of the Vincent Club, the Sewing Circle League, the Chilton Club and the Women's City Club. She is an athletic outdoor girl, an enthusiastic worker in all the helpful causes which she represents and is specially active in the anti-suffrage campaign.

Yesterday she announced that from one to two new branches weekly are being formed and added to the 130 branches now comprising the organization, and that many meetings daily were being held in different parts of the State.

Childs Frick Leases Manchester Cottage

Childs Frick, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Frick of New York and Pride's Crossing, settles on the North Shore as a family man for the first time this year. Mr. Frick, who married Miss Frances S. Dixon of Baltimore, had a little heir arrive in his family circle in February.

The Manchester cottage Mr. Frick has chosen is on Smith's Point. It is one of the Harris cottages known as "Alhambra." It is unpretentious yet attractive and well arranged and has a very picturesque location. In its rear is a big grove of trees on one side is Mr. W. Scott Fitz's beautiful gardens with vistas of the Summer Episcopal church in the foreground. It is also quite near the entrance to the William Lowell Putnam estate.

Mr. Frick maintains a polo field and bungalow at Wenham, but is having his Summer surroundings modest and simple.

* * *

Miss Helen Frick has arrived for the season. She is occupying the cottage on the estate until the Frick mansion is opened. For the past five weeks the Frick family has made week-end visits here. The coming this year of Mr. and Mrs. Frick as grandparents is of much interest. A little daughter was born to the Childs Fricks in February.

* * *

* * *

The Washington B. Thomases moved down this week for the Summer.

* * *

* * *

* * *

Judge and Mrs. William Caleb Loring were planning to settle at Pride's Crossing this week for the season.

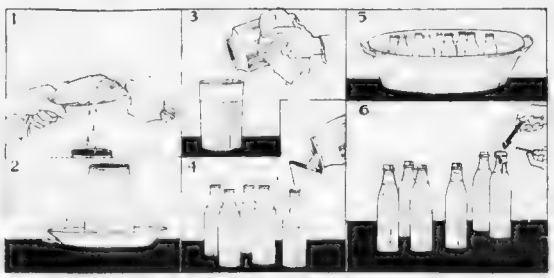
How to MAKE YOUR OWN GRAPE JUICE

Follow These Instructions and Prepare This HEALTHFUL BEVERAGE Right at Home



SIX STEPS IN THE MAKING OF GRAPE JUICE

1—Squeezing the juice out of the crushed grapes. 2—Boiling the juice in a double boiler. 3—Pouring it into a glass or enameled pitcher and allowed to settle for twenty-four hours. 4—Straining and pouring into bottles. 5—Heating the filled bottles. 6—Corking and sealing the bottles to keep out the fungus germs

The Husband Who Went to Live With His Wife and Her "Soul-Mate."

ONE of the most extraordinary instances in which a husband has ignored t[illegible] ples supposed to be d[illegible] husbands, shows him actua[illegible] ing the way for his wife's [illegible] the more remarkable is t[illegible] this "soul mate triangle" are New Englanders and the scene of their strange proceedings not many miles from staid old Boston

The philosophical husband in the case is Dr. H. Lincoln Chase, of Brookline, Mas[illegible] hospitably received affinity of his wife is an architect of equal social and professional prominence in Massachusetts—Hartley Dennett Dr Chase did not rush into this arrangement impulsively He gave his wife and her affinity two whole years in which to make certain that they were really soul-mated, and not victims of an evanescent infatuation

The scene of this probation was the amiable doctor's farm at East Alstead N H While Dr Chase remained in Boston attending to his medical practice Mrs. Chase and her two children and Architect Dennett were domesticated at the Chase farm When Dr Chase was satisfied of the complete success of the experiment he announced the fact to his friends

Whatever were the feelings of those friends at the calm announcement imagine their amazement when the doctor added that he was now ready to join the soul-mated couple and establish his second home with them at the East Alstead farm Pursuant to that step he was severing his professional relations in Boston, and would transfer his practice to Alstead There, he said, he expected to spend the rest of his life, happy in sharing his wife's affections with the architect, his "best friend."

Outside of the scene of this triangular domestic arrangement the doctor will retain but one important interest—his aged mother. She is an old resident of Brookline, and he will visit her there occasionally

There are mutual friends of this strange triangle who do not regard them with undi[illegible] They say that the doctor, his wife and the architect are simply endeavoring to "approach their ideal of living" It appears, however, that the wife of Architect Dennett was not in harmony with this "ideal" She divorced him, and is living with her two children in New York, where she is prominent in woman's suffrage work and one of the founders of the Twilight Sleep Mothers' Association

Dr. Chase, after spending several weeks as a member of his triangular household at Alstead, paid a visit to Boston. He spoke willingly to a friend, saying that nothing had occurred to mar the "ideal serenity of the household." He added: "I am taking up my permanent residence at East Alstead where I shall live a simple, Christian life. There is something new in our life in the hills. There life is freed from much of its strenuousness, and there people of like tendencies can get together and talk over matters which have called them into a common relation—a type of life which reflects the teachings of Christ, Tolstoy and Emerson."

The theories which finally brought this woman and these two men into their hitherto almost unk[illegible] amicable arrangement [illegible] ago a wedding of [illegible] Mrs Dennett and [illegible] ried in 1897, and t[illegible] was Margaret Everett [illegible] and Dr Chase was on[illegible] The doctor was an ardent w[illegible]

Dennett had gone [illegible] start his career as an arc[illegible] He met Miss Mary Ware, a graduate of the Bost[illegible] and he, too, was an artist at [illegible] The two families became intimate. Dr. Dennett was taken into the Chase home becoming the doctor's "chosen friend." Presently Mrs Dennett began to make objections [illegible] mother the referee who heard the testimony made the ruling

Margaret Chase has been able by the force of her personality to monopolize the affections of Hartley Dennett, another woman's husband, and at the same time to retain the affection of her own husband

"Hartley Dennett, living as he is with the children of another man and dependent in large measure upon the bounty of that man for support, and holding the views as to life and conduct that he does, as disclosed by his acts and by his testimony, is not a fit person to have the care and custody of either of the children"

At that time Dennett described his deep affection for Mrs. Chase as "a very real and splendid thing in his life."

It was not until recently that Dr. Chase was able to prepare to put his theories of love and life into practice at Alstead His plan of a permanent residence at East Alstead means a great sacrifice on his part, as he gives up his Brookline medical connections

The doctor declares that the end is worth the sacrifice, and says the "platonic friendship" of his wife and Dennett is "so Christian-like as to be more than earthly"

Each of the parties to this strange domestic arrangement, however, is brought necessarily, into contact with matters that are "earthly," and it remains to be seen whether their philosophy will be equal to all such emergencies through the long years to come

The Husband Who Made a "Purity Pact"

WHEN the case of Clement Remington D Cunningham against his wife Irene Cunningham for severance of marital ties was heard before the Superior Court in Philadelphia, an extraordinary condition of affairs was brought out. Mr. Cunningham is the president of the Crucible Steel Castings Company and wealthy. The Cunninghams were married fourteen years before their separation came about, and during all that time not even the closest members of the family of either of them had any hint that the marriage was not one of average happiness

By Mrs. Cunningham—Well, we were engaged to be married about five years. Before we were married, while we went together four years at least, and about a year before we were married we commenced to talk of things pertaining to our living together * * * He said, "Irene, I would like to live a life just as we are living to-day or to-night." I don't think anything more was said that night, It may have been Tuesday or Wednesday—two or three nights later when he spoke of it again. He asked me what I thought of it. He said he was willing to live his life—the rest of his life, as he lived it that night, in perfect purity. "Well," he said, "I am willing to take an oath on it" and I suppose there was half an hour's talk on it but I don't just remember the words; and I said, "Well, I am willing to take an oath to live the way I have lived anyhow." And so we took the oath. That was about an hour before he left

Q. Describe what you did and said

A. We went down, both of us on our knees and no raised his hand and he took the oath first

Q. What did he say?

A. He said, "I will take this oath before God that I will live the rest of my life in perfect purity"—and I said the same

Q. Did you raise your hand?

A I raised my hand

Q. What did you say?

A I said, "I take an oath before God that I will live the rest of my life in perfect purity"—and then we had a little prayer to ourselves—not aloud; and then we got up and [illegible] We would never say the things about ourselves to any one of what we had done We would keep it a secret Up to the time I came and told my attorneys it was a secret. It was not spoken of then again, only as to the happiness we would have living our lives the way we had promised, until after we were married, and I often used to ask him, "Clem, are you satisfied the way you are living?" and he said, "More than happy," but he did n't like living in the house with others; that was the only thing that he did not like. I asked him three or four times during our time together

Q. How long before you were married was his so-called oath taken between you two?

A. It was taken about a year before

Mr. Cunningham also, according to the testimony, wrote a couple of letters to Mrs Cunningham concerning the agreement. The statement of the case refers to them as follows

"He asked her to make that resolution a matter of prayer, and to further emphasize the solemnity of their pledge, he wrote her two letters, which she ever after kept as sensible reminders of her vow. In those letters, among other things, he said: 'We promised last night, Irene, yes, more than promised, took an oath that we would lead the rest of our life in perfect purity. We need God's help to keep this promise. It would not be an easy task for everybody I do not say it will be easy for us, but much easier than the majority of others, for, Irene, we have always tried to do what is right, and this promise we must do as near right as we know how. God will help us, I feel sure.' * * * 'Irene, I think for the past two weeks there has not been a happier person in the world than I. Why shouldn't I be? I have a person to love me with just a pure thought, as I do you. It took, Irene, the purest, truest kind of love to talk to you the way I did

Amazing Indifference of a Titanic Husband

MRS. LUCILE POLK CARTER was a leader of Philadelphia fashionable society Before her marriage she was the brilliant and beautiful Lucile Polk, of Baltimore. She married William E Carter, a multi millionaire of Philadelphia and a son of one of its oldest families

Mr. and Mrs. Carter set sail on the Titanic upon it ship's tragic voyage. Their children were with them. It was this voyage, apparently, that led to the widely divergent [illegible] during her testimony Mrs Carter made the following remarkable statement

"When the vessel struck, my husband came to me and said: 'Get up and dress yourself and the children' I never saw him again until I was put aboard the Car[illegible]

The Man Who Wished His Wife Was Dead

IT was by talking continually of the expensive funeral he would give his wife that James F. Rogan made married life unendurable to her

In demanding a separation Mrs. Clare G Rogan said that while she was lying seriously ill her husband talked continually of the elaborate funeral he was going to give her when she died. He actually moved the furniture about to show her how he would arrange the coffin in the room

He figured up how much money he would have left after all the funeral expenses had been paid

"It will come high, Clare, but it will be worth it" he observed

Rogan is a law clerk and investigator at No 94 Grant street, Brooklyn, N. Y. His wife asked a separation in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn

Mrs Rogan's illness compelled her to go to St Mary's Hospital for an operation There, she says, Rogan continued to dwell on her funeral as a topic of conversation, as he had already done at home. He brought their son, ten years old, to see his mother

"Take a last look at your mother, Allie," she says he said to the boy. "You'll never see her alive again."

The Court made Mr. Rogan pay alimony

The Husband Who Believed in Wife Spanking

THAT her husband spanked her like a baby was Mrs. Anna Bebell's principal ground f[illegible] for a separation from him

Had he not used a slipper the offence would not perhaps have been so bad, but he used that article—and a heavy one, too—in such a manner as to cause her severe pain

Justice Garretson in the Queens County Supreme Court decided that Mrs. Bebell was entitled to a separation.

The Heroic Crews of the Mine Sweeping Trawlers

Simple Fishermen, Risking Their Lives Without Hope of Glory, Who Keep the Seas Open and Comparatively Safe for Allied Commerce and Fleets.

The Mine-Sweepers By H. Ingamells

"Ware mine!" "Full speed ahead!"
[illegible]
The [illegible] wings—
The sullen breaker flings.

The men of Grimsby Town
Grope their way on the rolling sea—
The storm-swept, treach'rous, gray North Sea—
Keeping the death-rate down.

Cold is the wind as the Gates of Death,
Howling a dirge with its biting breath,
Tearing rude music from rigging taut—
The tune with deadly omen fraught
Look to yourselves, oh, sailors bold—
I am the one ye know of old!
I make my sport with such as ye—
The game that is played on every sea
With death as the loser's penalty."

Valiantly, stoutly, manfully,
The trawlers fight the gale;
Buoyant they ride on the rolling sea—
The storm-swept, treach'rous, gray North Sea—
Lash'd by the North Wind's flail.

Whelming the heart with a pulsing fear,
Hurling their might on the slugg'ring craft,
[illegible] board of her fore and aft.

Sweeping her decks as she hugs her course

Little they care, come wind or wave,
The men of Grimsby Town;
There are mines to destroy and lives to save,
They take the risk, these sailormen brave
With a laugh and a joke, or a rollicking stave,
As the gear goes plunging down.

Our Fear they never knew!
Now on their quest they go
With measured tack and slow—
Seeking the hidden fate
Strewn with a devlish hate

Death may come in a terrible form,
Death in a calm or death in a storm,
Death without warning, stark and grim,
Death in a horrible, hideous guise—
Such is the mine-sweepers' sacrifice!
Careless of terrors and scornful of cost
Stolid and steadfast, they sweep the seas.

The men of Grimsby Town
Do their bit on the rolling sea—
The storm-swept, treach'rous, gray North Sea—
Doing their duty unflinchingly,
Keeping the death-rate down.

How to Make Your Own Lingerie

No. 8 in the Useful Series of Lessons in Home Dressmaking Prepared Especially for This Newspaper By Mrs. Minnie Berry

HOME MADE underwear is often more satisfactory than the most attractive ready-to-wear garments of this kind. In making drawers, take exact measures around the waist, from waist to end of knee, and around the full part of the hips. Cut the leg (or body portion) as illustrated, and join seam by hand or machine, with running stitches, leaving [illegible] on the right side, turn the leg portions inside out and bind the raw edges in another seam (by hand or machine), thus forming a fell or French seam. For open drawers, [illegible] the upper portion from [illegible] to waist with a one inch [illegible] facing. For closed drawers [illegible] portion is seamed together. Some drawers are finished with a yoke at the top, while others have the body (or leg portion) joined directly to a band. A yoke is best for stout figures, since it avoids any fulness directly at the waistline. If made with a yoke, the garment is cut double, turned up on the wrong side about half an inch, and basted. Be sure to have the yoke of the proper waist measurement at its upper edge. Gather the [illegible] a [illegible] upper [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Easing Across the Canal

As our trusty ship backed out of the Colon dock and beat it for the Canal entrance, on that warm, sunny March morning—110 in the shade or out—it was hard to believe that we could be so hot up and still be on earth. All the tourists looked like the end of a fast one-step in the Elks' Club ballroom, with all the windows closed. The men were only in their knee-lengths and sleeveless, and the women were in doubt.

The harbor was full of hungry, buzzardly sea gulls, flopping around the boat and eating everything from cigarette ends to sticks of wood. In diet they out goat the angoras and put all ostriches in the milk fed class. Further out were half a dozen sorry-looking German boats, burning low, and not caring to go home in the dark. Somebody ought to write a parody on "After the Ball," and call it "After the War Is Over," so the poor fellas interned would have sump'n to sing.

This is no idle guide book, but they call the Atlantic end of the canal Limon Bay, and as we glided by the breakwater and had an intense look at either shore, we didn't see much but luxuriant vegetation, same as on the banks of the Wabash, except a few palm trees, growing quietly. Still, all the trippers had their kodaks primed, and were just as worried as if getting set for the hundred-yard dash.

As we have noted, the thermometer had creeped strong, mercury had gone way above par, and the bulls were bidding it up. Collars commenced to weaken. A pop-eyed youth from Chicago said sump'n ancient borrowing one, and asked us what size we wore. Promptly we told him 17½, and he said, Oh, that wouldn't do him. So we suggested that he wrap it around twice, and then he didn't say anything. That warm would be an interesting study under the lens. His trade was shellac labels for underwear, which is the funniest excuse for living we've heard to date, except one—the guy we met recently who was a traveling salesman for wooden legs.

Well, the channel became narrower, and the Gatun locks hove in view. There are three going each way, and all boats have to keep to the left. But that's all right. Anything to get through. As soon as we eased into the first lock, we hadda shut off the power, because the boat hadda be towed through, same as any canal boat. In the old days they used donkeys to do the towing, but now they're little electric engines, which run along a track on the brink. Donkey engines, they should be called but we have an idea a donkey engine is sump'm else. The gates closed behind the ship, water poured in from the bottom of the lock, we were floated up to the level of the next lock, and there you are. It's a simple proposition, having taken only ten years to build, and if each one of the 400 had contributed a million bones they could have paid for the whole thing. But they do say the 400 are awful tight.

As we were pulled along we could hear all the trippers, lined up from the bow of the boat to the stern, pass the word along, "It's certainly a wonderful piece of engineering." Nobody missed that. It was just as sure as the chain of fellas who yell, "Car coming!" at the auto race.

We were proceeding proudly through Gatun Lake when the boss pilot ran the boat into the mud again. That boat sure took to mud like an actor to his picture in the paper. So we hadda back up and wait about three hours to point the tub's nose into the proper channel once more. Meanwhile, perspiration rained supreme.

The pop-eyed guy came along and announced that he was ruining his $2.50 shirt. If he bought a dozen shirts for that money, as we do, he'd save less tears to prepare to shed. For all that, we pitied Poppy, for he really didn't know any better. Never ridicule one's infirmities, thought we, charitably.

When the big skiff finally started up, it was well into the afternoon. That species of bird about whom the most famous limerick in the world has been written began to appear in profusion and in hunger. Or, a wonderful bird is the pelican, etc. It is the national bird of Panama and it is to the [illegible] as the robin to the angleworm. After scooping a beakful of fish by flight on top of one of the canal lighthouses, and d a little cat-and[illegible]e sketch in the most artistic manner that nature has conferred upon any living thing. When standing still, his beak, resting upon his swan neck, assumes the position of a patriarch's whiskers but in flight it juts out like an Indian's arrow en route to a deer.

As we wound along toward the big Culebra Cut, we saw a wireless station up on a hill, and the steel tower seemed to have three or four big punkins swinging from it. We learned that they were signals to let the next man know we were on our way. They were yellow balloons and suddenly got pulled up and down, a signal achievement, one might say, if one were [illegible] accuracy. Then the signal man appears on the hill brow [illegible] through a cavernous megaphone that two boats were coming [illegible] to run into 'em. We hoped the pilot heard the dope, for I [illegible] ation.

There was a fella on [illegible] who didn't believe in anything. He didn't believe in eating meat [illegible] was sprouting all over with vegetation and vegetable ideas. He didn't believe in vivisection, vaccination, veriskimilitude or velox. [illegible] looked all the stars over with an opera glass, and told [illegible] on it, but he didn't believe they twinkled. He didn't agree with [illegible] not even himself, for he was da negativ. Let he wave a [illegible] and turned up his hat on the slightest to any clothing [illegible]. And about this point in the canal he started reading in a loud, vulgar voice, from his guide book, at awaving one arm wi[illegible] at what he read.

"Passing Gorgona, we are now at Bi Obispo, where the [illegible] excavations are brought [illegible] incredulous [illegible] fact seem, there were 8,359,727 [illegible] of earth here [illegible] within the comparatively small area of 14,115½ acres. It is interesting to note, as we look along the bank, the [illegible] vels, those silent heroes of the Culebra Cut [illegible] with mountains and discouraging struggles wit[illegible] such fantastic yet realistic history of this marvelous [illegible] for all time to come. Let us pause a moment and [illegible]."

Yes, that's the stuff [illegible]. That's what makes calamity of so long life. When is a guide book not a guide book? Why it doesn't say "Incredulous a[illegible]" It's interesting to me," and "Let us pause a moment and [illegible]."

But we gotta hand it to the [illegible] just the same. We saw two of the old grandpops there [illegible] tons each at one clip which is some ravenous. We were lucky to get by without getting under a slide, else we might'a been down there yet, catching malaria [illegible] cut we and taming them. We passed Gold Hill, where most of the slides happen, and they've named it that because it costs so much to dig there all the time.

They give Culebra Cut fifteen years more to stop its bad acting, and then if it continues to slide, slide, keep on [illegible] Hog, the engineers are gonna get sore. We know they will, too, if they happen to get buried under any of it, for some of that dirt drops three or four hundred feet before it reaches the water.

At the end of the big cut we [illegible] a single lock, called Pedro Miguel. It was named after a famous [illegible] Pete McGill, who settled around there in the good old days and turned Spaniard when he ran for alderman and went out for the Spanish vote. This lock let us down a peg, after the fashion of the Gatun place, and we took a two-mile sail through Miraflores Lake, coming then to the two Miraflores locks, which let us down to the level of the [illegible]

[illegible] had just [illegible] an hour of the night when Craig was working over it. He was so intent on locating a strange noise in the engine that he did not see the serpentine eyes of Wu as he peered into the garage through a small window.

Wu was not alone. As always, he had been able to secure an assistant in the devilish scheme he had in mind, not a sinister, evil faced fellow, but a neat, quiet, apparently honest-looking young mechanician.

George was bending closely over the engine as he speeded it up to see what was [illegible] of the rattle, when the door of the garage opened quietly. On tiptoe Wu and the young mechanician, a man named Johnson, slipped in, Johnson carrying an automobile robe.

The next moment the two had leaped upon the defenceless George. Johnson threw the robe over his head, while Wu wound him about with a rope. He was completely and instantly put out.

Just then, working as if by the clock, for such was the precision of Wu's plans, a closed car, muffled down, slipped up to the garage door. They hustled the unresisting George into the car, Johnson taking the place at the wheel and Wu sitting on guard in back with George, bound and almost suffocated.

George was loyal, if anything. Threats and bribe had no effect on him, even after he had come to in Wu's secret den.

"There is paper, pen and ink," threatened Wu. "Write what I tell you."

George remained motionless, defiant.

Slowly he picked up a murderous dirk, which lay on the table before him, and felt the point thoughtfully. A deep, guttural order hissed from the Serpent's lips. Instantly two of the servants seized George, while the third bent his head back. As Wu raised the knife, it was more than even the iron nerves of George could stand.

He broke down.

"Take the pen," directed Wu, adding, as George took it mechanically, "Write."

Both Elaine and Aunt Josephine were much surprised at the non-appearance of George in the morning.

It was explained, apparently, when Jennings, the butler, ushered in a neat and quiet young man who politely told a story of an accident to his dear friend, George, as he handed a note to Elaine.

"I think you'll do," nodded Elaine. "Jennings, will you show Johnson how to get to the garage?"

For a long time Kennedy had been perfecting a miniature wireless telephone of his own invention, and the activities of Wu Fang now caused him to hasten his work.

It was the next morning after the capture of Long Sin that Craig got the instrument working to his satisfaction. I was delighted, for I had been much interested in following his work on it.

"You see, Walter," Kennedy explained, setting a little black box on the laboratory table, "I've got this thing down to an irreducible minimum. It is the most compact affair imaginable. See. I open the face of the box. I lift up these miniature aerials of the inverted L type. Here is the transmitting apparatus. Here the receiving, all tuned. I press this lever—"

As he pressed the lever the buzzer in the other telephone sounded.

"I'm going to ask you, Walter," he went on folding down the little aerials and shutting up the box, "to take this other instrument over to Elaine."

He placed the wireless telephone in a bag and a few minutes later I left the laboratory.

"Good morning, Mr. Danesco," Elaine greeted, adding, as she caught sight of the bag, "not going to leave us, are you?"

"No," I replied. "I've brought you a present from Craig—a wireless telephone. You see, he says that if you will keep this with you wherever you go, you can always communicate with him."

"How interesting!" she exclaimed.

"Yes," I agreed, relating the joke which Craig had played on me as, briefly as I could, I explained the working of the telephone to both Elaine and Aunt Josephine.

Out in the Atlantic heaving over the choppy seas, a dingy old schooner was tacking her way toward New York harbor. The captain, Jake Gregor, was a disreputable looking man, as were both his craft and his crew of mixed whites and Chinese.

Gregor had come out on deck and stood there gazing at where the land ought to be. He had just finished scrawling a note on a piece of paper resting on the after cabin roof when one of the men reached down and from a small wooden cage took a struggling white carrier pigeon. They fastened the note, rolled up in a sort of quill, to the bird's leg and let the bird loose. It circled up, then straight as an arrow darted off landward.

"They'll be glad to know we're safe and so near," nodded Gregor. "And confound any revenue men that stand between us!"

In a room in a tenement Wu Fang and several Chinamen were seated talking and smoking. It was not Wu's headquarters, but a poorly furnished place.

Outside a nearby window was a large box which had a small sliding door on the outside, arranged so that it fell almost at a touch, working a little signal flag on the back of the box toward the room in which the Chinamen were seated. Now and then, as they talked, [illegible] would [illegible] or [illegible].

Suddenly there was a flutter of wings outside. A pure white pigeon seemed to glide into the box and, as the homing bird did so, the door automatically shut. It was a cage such as is used for carrier pigeons. The little flag in the room moved, and the Chinamen crowded about the box as Wu opened it, reached in and caught the bird. Carefully he took the message from the bird's foot. As one of them placed the bird in another box and reset the trap, Wu unrolled the paper and read

10 A. M

Twenty-six miles southeast of Sandy Hook. Will drop anchor off Staten Island tonight.

"You will let me know if any later message comes," directed Wu to one of his men as, a moment later, the Chinese master criminal left the tenement.

Cautiously he made his way to the secret entrance to his own apartment. He had scarcely entered when a Chinaman who had evidently been waiting for him rose and bowed. It was Hop Ling, the proprietor of the opium den.

"Is there any news yet, master?" he asked.

"Yes, Gregor is landing your opium tonight. I'll have a girl for him to take back to Shanghai with him, where she can be sold."

The opium dealer bowed.

"He ready at dark tonight," added Wu as the man left.

Kennedy had begun to get closer on the trail of Wu and, having dispatched me to Elaine with the wireless telephone, it occurred to him that he might spend a few hours profitably sleuthing about Chinatown searching for clews to the Serpent.

He donned the roughest of his old suits and turned his coat collar up, while an old slouch hat was pulled over his eyes. But it was not so far over as to dim his sight.

He paused once by an electric light pole to watch a gangster saunter past. Twice the fellow had walked up and down the street, and Kennedy, eyeing him narrowly, had concluded that there was something familiar about him, though he could not place him.

As the gangster shouldered by, he lurched over to the electric light pole, and Kennedy felt his hand touched by that of the gangster. He was more than surprised to feel something like a piece of cardboard surreptitiously shoved into his hand, and he clutched it. The gangster passed, and, as he did so, Kennedy looked after him, then bent over and read

Captain John Brainard,
U. S. Secret Service

Written underneath the engraved name was "Follow."

For a moment Craig hesitated, then he remembered. Brainard's disguise had been good, but neither had been able to completely hide their identity, for they had worked once shoulder to shoulder on a big counterfeiting case.

Slowly Craig followed. Brainard entered a saloon by a side door and seated himself in a back room. A moment later Kennedy slouched in and sat down at the same table. Brainard nodded and Craig extended his hand quietly. He looked about. They were alone.

"A big shipment of opium is going to be landed tonight and I'm trying to locate the Chinese gang back of it. Think you can help me?"

"Anything to do with that hop joint up the street?"

"I'll help you," agreed Kennedy.

For several minutes they talked, laying out a plan. Finally they paid the check and rose to go out. As they reached the side door a Chinaman passed. Kennedy drew Brainard back.

"Did you see that Chinaman?" returned Kennedy. "That's Hop Ling. He runs the opium joint. I think he is worth shadowing."

Keeping discreetly in the rear of the Chinaman, Kennedy and Brainard followed until Hop paused before a ramshackle tenement. No sooner had he disappeared inside than Craig and Brainard advanced, careful that never in turn were not followed.

They entered and went upstairs. At last they came to a door outside which the two paused to listen. At least two, perhaps more Chinamen were talking inside.

"Can you make out what they are saying?" asked Brainard.

"Something about birds, replied Craig. "We've got them. There are no [illegible] rush the door."

Together they catapulted them[illegible] door and it flew open. Instantly, before the Chinamen could recover from their surprise at the sudden attack, Craig and Brainard were on them. One rushed for a window, smashing it with a chair and trying to get out. Craig seized him and helped corner the other, who turned out to be Hop Ling. It was the work of only a moment to snap the bracelets on the two and cover them with a gun.

"What's that?" demanded Brainard, looking at a [illegible] window, as Kennedy moved over to see it.

"A pigeon trap, I suspect," Craig replied. Let's wait."

They sat there for several minutes. Evidently the Chinese had been waiting for some thing. Craig felt that waiting might pay.

At last he was rewarded by the sound of a [illegible]. A click followed as the little door shut, trapping the pigeon. The signal flag in the room moved.

Kennedy looked at it a moment, then carefully opened the door in the back of the trap and seized the bird. From the quill on its leg he took a visible rolled note and read:

5 P. M.

Will be off Van Dort jetty in two hours.
GREGOR.

What did it mean? Threats, imprecations, nothing could extract a word from the two impassive prisoners.

"Come," ordered Kennedy sharply of Hop Ling, not for a moment letting his vexation show in his face. "Walk ahead of me."

Two of the gang had been captured, but Wu got away as far as ever. He marched Hop along suddenly, while Brainard kicked the other Chinaman to his feet and followed.

They did not have far to go. Scarcely a block away stood a policeman, and Craig waved to him.

Quickly Craig produced cards of identification and they left their handcuffed prisoners with the understanding that they were to be held until full charges could be made against them.

At the first telephone pay station Craig turned in and called up the laboratory to which I had returned.

"I think I've got the best clew yet, Walter," he called. "You remember Brainard? Well, I want you to meet me at the Battery, where a revenue cutter will be waiting. Bring along that wireless telephone, too. Don't forget."

I hung up the receiver excitedly and tucked the little black box under my arm as I hurried out.

Elaine had decided to motor down to the country home of one of her friends who lived on the shore of New Jersey, and, accordingly, late in the afternoon, called the garage and ordered Johnson to have the car ready.

As Elaine was whirled downtown and over to ferry from New York she was deeply engrossed in her own thoughts.

How far they had gone she did not pay much attention but she knew the roads well. They had come to a fork, and Johnson veered off to the left. Instinctively Elaine knew that the right hand road was the more direct, and she touched a little signal that summoned the driver.

It was, however, merely a ruse on his part to gain time and give some of Wu's men an opportunity. For, as the car approached the fork, two roughnecks, bidden behind a rock in the shrubbery, had been straining their eyes down the road and at the approach of the car had drawn back closer under cover.

Johnson stopped some hundred feet or so down the wrong road past the rock in answer to Elaine's signal. It was the chance the roughnecks wanted. They leaped out from their shelter. Not another car or vehicle was in sight. Quickly they shrank down the road.

As Elaine was becoming vexed at Johnson's first show of stubbornness, she suddenly felt strong arms circling her, while a huge, very dirty hand pressed with irresistible force over her mouth. She struggled, but it was of no use.

They pinned her down to the floor of the car Johnson drew the curtains and leaped into his seat, from which he had descended, leaving the engine running.

It was very late in the afternoon I did my best to get down to the Battery with the wireless telephone to meet Kennedy and Brainard, but it was dark before I got there.

As I hurried down to the dock, I saw that they had already boarded the revenue cutter and were waiting impatiently. It was a fairly sizable craft.

They hauled me aboard and we cast off. The wind blew keenly from the bay and we spun down the harbor, keeping a sharp lookout for any suspicious craft.

Already Wu Fang and a couple of his lieutenants had gone down to the Van Dort jetty. No message had been received from Gregor, but they felt sure that he would be there with the schooner.

Finally Wu directed one of his men to set off a signal, a flashlight on the end of the jetty while he strained his eyes through the darkness for some answering signal.

He had not reckoned wrong. Far out over the water came an answering signal from the schooner.

"Good!" exclaimed Wu with satisfaction, as he turned and picked his way back up the dock. On the jetty he came to one of the deserted mansions of a generation or two ago which lined the shore at that point. There, in a yard beside it stood Elaine's car.

Wait for me here, then," nodded Wu.

Down in a musty room in the basement of the deserted house was Elaine. She was neither bound nor gagged. In fact, there was no necessity for it. No one could hear her cries, nor could she escape, for the two roughnecks who had seized her were guarding her, besides a couple of Chinamen.

Wu Fang came in silently and moved over close to her. He said not a word, but an evil smile spread over his sinister face as she shrank from him.

Meanwhile a yawl had put out from the schooner loaded with cans of the precious contraband drug, and had pulled up at the old stone jetty and dock. Chinamen hastily unloaded it and started up to the house laden with the heavy tins.

As Wu stood before Elaine, the Chinamen carrying the dope tins entered and began piling them up in an old closet in the room. At last they finished putting it away.

Wu nodded, then turned to Elaine. "Go!" he hissed, raising his finger and pointing to the door.

Trembling, she obeyed, and Wu Fang and the two toughs followed, one of the Chinamen picking up her suitcase. Across the almost untraveled road they forced her and down on the stone dock, every footstep dogged by Wu and his emissaries.

She climbed down into the dirty yawl, and the Chinamen tossed her suitcase after her.

"If you see that for any reason she is about to escape," added Wu savagely, "do away with her."

He finished with a threatening gesture as the Chinamen followed Elaine into the boat. Then he turned on his heels and walked rapidly back to the deserted house. There he climbed into the automobile with the two toughs and all were rapidly driven away by the faithless mechanician.

The yawl tossed up and down on the rough swells that came in from the ocean, as the powerful arms of the sailors pulled her out through the blackness to the schooner.

There Elaine was lifted over the rail and forced across the deck down into the murky, ill-smelling hold. It made no difference to Gregor whether he carried a cargo of contraband or a white slave. In his gruff voice he bellowed orders for getting under way, while the Chinaman half led, half pushed Elaine into a cramped room amidships.

He set down the suitcase and, with a grunt and a scowl left, locking the door and shuffling along the passageway to a steep flight of steps to the deck.

Elaine paced up and down her narrow prison distracted.

Suddenly she paused a moment as her eye fell on the suitcase. There flashed through her mind the message I had given her from Kennedy.

She seized the suitcase and tore it open with nervous fingers.

"Oh, will it work—will it work?" she breathed in prayer to herself as she lifted out tenderly the little wireless telephone.

She opened it, pulled up the little aerials, and pressed the lever.

"Hello—hello—Craig—hello!"

It was her last chance. Would it work?

By this time we had come in the revenue cutter to the old dock that was known as the Van Dort jetty.

As we swung around to it, with Kennedy and Brainard I leaped out. We gazed about, hunting for signs of the opium smugglers. All was still as a grave, except for the ominous lapping of the waves.

I happened to look down at the ground There in the light of a lantern I saw one of those square-toed footprints which we had come to know so well—the print of a Chinese shoe.

The footprints led up from the dock to an old, deserted, dilapidated house. We paused a moment before it. Just then a door opened and a Chinaman appeared.

With a cry he darted back, but we were at him. There were others inside, too, but they were easily overpowered.

Prodding the reticent Celestials, we retraced our steps to the jetty. Brainard's men carrying the opium. At the dock we loaded our prisoners and the contraband on the cutter.

It was plain that although we had captured the dope, the ship which had brought it had escaped, and, worst of all, Wu had again slipped through our fingers.

Brainard gave the order and we left the wharf. As we stood gazing from the captured opium to the prisoners, Brainard was visibly elated. "Shake," he said laconically to Craig.

Whether it was that he was disappointed at the failure to land Wu or whether he merely had a premonition that all was not well, somehow Kennedy did not share the elation. He extended his hand mechanically.

Just then a buzz as if a bell had rung startled us. It was so unexpected that I exclaimed, although the next minute I realized that it was from the wireless telephone which Craig had asked me to bring from the laboratory.

Kennedy seized the box, opened it hastily and clapped the little receiver to his ear.

"Hello—hello—yes, this is Craig. Where are you—what?"

Of course we could hear only one side of the conversation, but from the look of intense horror that passed over Kennedy's face I knew that something terrible must have happened to Elaine.

But at Craig's next words I myself gasped.

"If you can get a light," he almost shouted, "thrust it out of the porthole to guide us. But we'll find you anyway. Keep up your nerve."

We crowded about him.

"Brainard—a pair of glasses—quick," he cried, dashing to the bow of the cutter, and full speed down the bay."

Briefly, as he swept the horizon ahead, he repeated the tale of Elaine's kidnaping.

We strained our eyes.

Far off, almost out on the ocean, we could see a tiny twinkle of light slowly waving back and forth.

As she heard Kennedy's instructions, she replaced the receiver and rose quickly to her feet from beside the suitcase. She looked about. There was a dingy oil lamp suspended from a beam of the dark above.

She seized it and ran to the porthole. Back and forth she waved it as far as her arms would permit.

As the schooner now slipped along, Gregor, who had left the man at the wheel, was gazing off, not particularly happy at the prospect of not touching a port for a long time again. Suddenly he became aware of a peculiar, though slight, gleam on the water. He leaned over the rail further. Below and a bit forward of him he could catch a glimpse of a light moving along the side of the boat.

"Confound that wench!" he muttered in a sudden fury, turning and seizing up a boathook lying on deck.

Raising it, he leaned far over the rail. Then he brought the boathook down suddenly on the lamp, smashing it into a thousand bits as they hissed into the water.

Elaine drew back in horror. In her hand was merely the handle of the lamp. It seemed as if her last hope had been blasted.

He pointed, and Gregor raised his glass as the rest, including the Chinaman to whom Wu had entrusted Elaine, crowded about.

There was a searchlight sweeping the water, as if a fast boat were hunting for something and were rapidly overhauling them.

"It's a revenue cutter," growled Gregor, lowering the glass after a quick scrutiny of the mysterious craft. "Crowd on more sail—start the auxiliary motor."

He volleyed forth his orders hoarsely. Instantly the deck was in an uproar. For the moment, in their anxiety to escape, they seemed to have forgotten Elaine—all except the Chinaman who had been set to guard her. Silently he drew from his blouse a knife and slipped down the companionway.

Elaine, her ears now sharpened by fear at the mysterious smashing of the light, had heard the commotion on deck. She seized a chair and propped it against the door.

She had acted not a minute too soon. Down the passageway, already, she could hear some one creeping stealthily. It was the Chinaman with his murderous knife. She heard him pause at the door as he looked again at his knife. Then the lock turned. The door creaked but she had propped the chair well, and it held.

Just then she heard a loud report outside, and for instant knew another. Then followed the crash of something heavy on the deck above, accompanied by a volley of vile oaths and quick footsteps, as Gregor gave hasty orders to his crew.

One after another, the table, a chest, everything movable, Elaine piled up against the door as it splintered. But it was of no use.

She moved over fearfully as far away as she could to the porthole and looked at the black water, as she leaned far out, then up at the deck only a few feet above her.

The door crashed in.

With frantic strength born of fear the heroic girl wriggled out of the porthole, as the schooner heeled over and managed just to catch the scuppers of the deck. Fear lent her strength. She succeeded in pulling herself up to the rail and then over on the deck just as the piled-up furniture tumbled over after the door gave way.

In the commotion Elaine had actually come over the rail unobserved. But she knew that she could not be that way long. There was just a chance that a white man might heed her appeal. Forbidding though he was even in the moonlight, Elaine started toward Gregor.

Just then the maddened face of the Chinaman appeared at the hatch. A moment later his lithe body worming itself out on deck. As he came nearer, Elaine retreated further toward Gregor.

Gregor, one eye on the approaching revenue cutter, the other on his ship and crew, had not seen her till then.

The Chinaman came a step nearer, knife upraised. She fled along the deck. There in the shrouds was a ladder. In desperation she seized a rung, swung herself around, and started up.

Her relentless pursuer followed, hand over hand, clenching the knife in his teeth. In her terror she tore off a piece of spar that had been loosened by a shot from the cutter and threw it full in his face.

Still on he came. She drew herself up There was no escape. A moment she trembled aloft.

Then, from a crosstree, she jumped, diving far out into the water. The Chinaman followed.

Hand over hand he churned the waves after her.

We were now nearing a low, rakish craft Though we signalled it, they paid no attention Instead, we could hear the chug-chug of an auxiliary gas engine.

Brainard sent a shot across the schooner's bow. Still she did not stop. Instead, the top sails broke out in spite of the gale and she headed away faster.

Another shot flashed out from our gun. This time a spar was carried away, as the searchlight playing on the schooner clearly showed.

We were rapidly gaining now.

We followed his finger as he peered forward tensely.

There in the rigging, hanging perilously, was Elaine. She was clinging there holding a Chinaman at bay.

Suddenly we saw her draw herself up and deliberately dive into the water. The Chinaman dived also. Hand over hand he went after her. We watched, speechless.

Kennedy turned and seized the rapid fire gun, whirling it around and aiming carefully. The Chinaman was a powerful swimmer and was rapidly gaining on Elaine. We could even see the gleam of the knife in the searchlight. Carefully Craig sighted the gun. The minute of a hair's breadth meant life or death.

He fired.

Not a minute too soon the shot ricochetted over the waves. The Chinaman's arms went up in mute surrender. His head sank below the surface of the water.

Instantly Craig and I were leaning far over the side of the cutter as, with power off, she slipped along, close to that figure swimming in the cold, black water. Neither of us paid any attention to Gregor's frantic signals of surrender as Brainard covered the schooner.

As we passed, Craig reached over and caught Elaine, lifting her bodily into our boat.

"Brainard—some hot drinks—quick," he ordered as he carried her, half fainting, to the cabin.

"Thank heaven for the wireless telephone," he muttered as he worked frantically to bring her around.

"No—it was the inventor—that did it," she murmured, looking up at him, safe.

Only 41 Days More in the Race

For the 25 De Luxe Tours to the California Fairs and $1,250 in Gold

— OFFERED BY THE —

BOSTON AMERICAN

Here's good news for the fortunate twenty-five who go as the guests of the Boston American on the three weeks' tour to the California Fairs and return.

Arrangements have been completed for the twenty-five winners to stay at "The Inside Inn" during their sojourn in San Francisco. This hotel, which is brand new and equipped with every conceivable modern improvement, is situated in the Fair Grounds. Could anything be better?

Many a millionaire would be glad to own a house the Fair Grounds if he could. Here's something at as good and you don't have to be a millionaire to joy it.

Think of living in these magnificent grounds day and night, of the annoyance you will be saved, of the trouble going to and fro that will be eliminated for you.

The contestants in this wonderful race for the twenty-five tours and the $1,250 in gold will surely appreciate this latest act of thoughtfulness on the part of the American.

From this fine hotel, the guests get a view of San Francisco Bay, the Golden Gate, the Pacific Ocean and the ships of the world coming and going.

The Exposition Grounds fronting the Bay and directly adjoining Fort Mason on one side and the Presidio on the other will be a scene of military and naval display

The big 10-vote coupon will be found on Page 2 of the "Main News Section" of this paper.

The vote standing of all candidates will be printed in next Sunday's American, and will include all votes polled in Series "A" and Series "B." Series "C" standing will follow shortly.

The contest ends in forty-one days more. Every day and every hour of every day, from now until the finish, should be productive of more and more of the all-important vote coupons, which will send twenty-five of the candidates on this wonderful trip to the Pacific Coast and the Exposition.

How To Have Health

By JESS WILL

An Instructive and Valuable Series of Remarkable Athletic Lessons and Health Hints for Men and Women, Boys and Girls Written for This Page by the Champion Physical Giant of the World

(Copyright, 1915, by A. Merritt. All Foreign Rights Protected.)

Jess Willard

This picture illustrates Jess Willard in the act of stretching his muscles, and also gives the reader an idea of his wonderful physical make-up. Willard is a firm believer in the beneficial effects of "a good stretch to take the kinks out," as he describes it.

LET me say at the start of my talks to you that every man, woman and child able to stand on their feet ought to exercise.

There are proper exercises for everybody. The weak, the strong, the robust and the feeble can all be aided by some form of physical training which should be as much a part of the daily routine as eating and sleeping.

We all want to live as long as possible. The older we get the sweeter life seems to us, but thousands and thousands of people shorten their lives from ten to twenty years and more by neglecting to exercise.

Those who live in the country where every opportunity to preserve physical health is afforded have only themselves to blame if they suffer from failing to grasp the advantages offered them. Tennis, boating, swimming, walking, fresh air and working in the open are within easy reach. Involuntarily, unless they are exceptionally lazy, they exercise their limbs and lungs without following any prescribed method.

Not so with the city man and woman and the younger generation confined to brick walls and asphalt streets. As a rule their exercising comes but once a year during vacation time. The majority try to crowd into fourteen days a strenuous programme of exercising that, ordinarily, would be enough for two months if indulged in a little at a time. In consequence they return to the tasks in the city with a wonderful tan, but a tired, strained body. That manner of exercising is worse than none at all.

It is to these that I wish to address myself particularly. Mostly they are not to blame. They conclude that because they live in the city exercising is out of the question unless they join a gymnasium, which perhaps they are not inclined to do because of press of time, or a limited pocketbook.

You Don't Have to Be Wealthy to Be Strong

But only a little time is needed for exercise and no money is necessary. All you want is a room, a chair a towel, sunlight, air and soap and water to keep yourself fit to the limit, and everybody has those. In my meetings with city people to whom I have talked about exercise I very often get the reply, "but I am so tired when I get home." To that I would answer that a little exercise will prove as restful as anything I know. That may sound funny, but not after you have read what I am about to tell you.

Scientists tell us that weariness, or fatigue signifies the presence of a poison in the blood. It is possible to extract a poison from a wearied human body that, when injected into a rabbit will kill it. These poisons are caused partly by sluggishness in the blood. What is it, then, that we can do to freshen the blood and invigorate the body? There is only one remedy; proper exercise. If you feel lazy this afternoon, or if you come home to-night tired, or if you are tired right now, this moment, go to your bedroom, take off all your clothes and follow out these simple exercises that I will describe in the next paragraph.

First stretch yourself as I am shown doing in my picture at the side of this page. Yawn if you want to, but stretch and stretch hard. Wave your arms about, and let the air circulate all over you. Have your window wide open, but be sure there is no draught caused by windows open at opposite ends of the room.

This air bath is not only invigorating but cleansing, almost as cleansing as the soap and water variety. Didn't know that, did you? Well, it's true. Now, next let your arms fall loosely at your sides, and expel all of the air from your lungs, through the nose, never through the mouth. Nature intended human beings to breathe entirely through the nose. It is in the nose that the air is strained to a large degree of the germs that should be kept from the lungs. Too much importance cannot be attached to this.

The Real Cure for "That Tired Feeling"

My set of poses on lung exercises show me in the first position with the air out of my lungs. Hold yourself that way for a moment and then let the air come back through your nose until you have resumed the natural or normal position as shown by my second picture in the breathing exercises. Do this two or three times. Then we are ready for the expansion exercise.

Keep your head and shoulders well back so as to give your lungs all the play they can get. Breathe slowly through the nose until you feel that your lungs are fully expanded and then let the air slowly out through the nose again. Do this slowly and do not attempt to hold your lungs at the full expanded position for any great length of time—I mean, do not hold the air until you feel that you cannot hold it any longer. This is all right for those used to breathing exercises, but for the beginner it is sometimes dangerous. There have been several cases of extreme dizziness that have resulted from ignorance by persons who have not been properly instructed how to breathe.

After you have been doing this for a few moments each day for about a week you can hold your breath as long as you want. The body will be used to the exercises by that time and you will run no danger of dizziness. The wonderful effects of these exercises cannot be exaggerated. With strong lungs you are better fitted to avoid and throw off disease germs that are continually attacking the body. Fresh air and big lung capacity mean pure blood and plenty of it.

Both men and women admire and desire the military, upright poise of the head and shoulders. After you have practised my breathing exercises you will find yourself unconsciously assuming this posture at all times, and you will also find your capacity for work increased to an amazing extent. This is because of the beneficial effect on the blood.

When consumption germs enter the lungs they attack the weakest part. This is generally the top of the lungs, for those persons who never take any breathing exercises only use a small part of the air cells with which they are provided. Nature intended all the cells to be used, and when they are neglected they become weak and liable to attacks from disease. There would be few cases of consumption if everybody looked after the lung development.

Now I take it for granted that you have done what I told you to do. You have gone to your room, stripped and have finished your deep breathing. Now you rub yourself all over with a coarse towel and don your clothes again. You came home tired out, as you thought. How do you feel now? Fresh, bright, invigorated and happy. Keep it up and in a few days your friends will be remarking on your good looks and the healthy color in your cheeks.

To-day I have gone into a simple exercise only that can be indulged in by old or young, but I will have special words of advice for the man and woman well on in years later on. We cannot all have the same exercises. For instance a man of fifty can get enough exercise out of golf to keep his body well fit, while tennis or any other very vigorous pastime might be extremely dangerous.

I do not believe that anybody, man or woman, over forty years of age, unless they have been used to some form of athletics all their lives, should take up any form of exercise that puts any great strain on the heart. There are simple exercises that they can indulge in with safety, and of which I will speak later.

How Willard Is Training His Daughters

Girls, don't get the idea that because a man is writing these articles they are intended solely for instruction of men and boys. I have three daughters of my own, and both my wife and I look after their physical training just as much as we take care of our son's body development. It used to be that women's exercises were confined to housework, and the physical training of girls was not looked upon seriously. That was a mistake, as we know now, and I note with satisfaction that in some girls' schools certain forms of physical exercises, such as swimming, for instance, have become a compulsory part of their education. This is as it should be. It is just as important for a girl to have a healthy, vigorous body as for a man, and one might go so far as to say it is more important.

I like tennis, basketball and swimming for girls. They are good, wholesome exercises, and not only develop every part of the body but give grace to the form. I read a remark by "Billy" Sunday the other day in which he said, "I do not preach one thing and practise another." Neither do I. I am training my girls along the lines I am laying down here because I know I am right, and I want always to see them well and happy.

Take swimming, for instance. I believe everybody ought to know how to swim. All I had was a pond to learn how to swim in when I was a boy, but my father made me learn, nevertheless. He was what people call a "crank" on the subject of having all his children know how to swim, and I am exactly that same kind of a crank. My children have much better opportunities for swimming than I had, for we live now in Los Angeles, with the Pacific Ocean only a few miles away. So they are all going to be mighty fine swimmers before I get through with their training.

No Excuse for Not Learning How to Swim

Later on I expect to devote a whole article on swimming, so for the present I will only speak of its benefits instead of going into details. In the first place I never accept the excuse of a man or woman who says, "I never had a chance to learn how to swim," or, "I never could learn. It is impossible to teach me." Those excuses are absurd. No matter where you live there is always some place to swim in. Every inland town has its swimming hole. A town without a "swimming hole" is like the story of the dead mule. You never met anybody who saw one. I advise salt water swimming when possible, but fresh water when you can get nothing else. Salt water acts more like a tonic than fresh, but as far as learning how to swim is concerned it doesn't matter which you learn in.

Basketball I don't know very much about, but the little I do know of it is good. I imagine it is a sort of a girls' football, and there's nothing like a little "roughing it" to give a girl confidence in herself. A few knocks won't hurt her, and the exercise is wonderful.

Tennis I do know about because there is no other form of exercise that I like better, with the exception of handball, which I don't consider a "lady's game." I once heard a man call tennis "a woman's game." He was telling the truth, but he meant to say that it was not a man's game. I'd like to have that man up against me for a few sets of singles and hear his opinion when I got through with him. I'll bet he wouldn't sneer at it any more. I like tennis for many reasons. In the first place it's a safe game for the untrained person to go into. If you don't know how to play tennis and you want to build yourself up it forces you to take things easy. The first thing you do is to hit a ball into the net. That means you have to stop jumping around and bend and stoop over to pick up the ball. This brings several sets of muscles into play and at the same time eases up on the jumping around.

Encourage Your Boy and Girl to Take Part in All Outdoor Sports Except Running.

The beginner in tennis is therefore confined to simple exercises such as walking, a little running, much bending over and a little arm exercise. As he or she becomes more expert they naturally increase the running and jumping, the more strenuous forms of exercise. That is why, as I said, I like tennis because it trains you in the proper way, easily and slowly at first, gradually building you up to perform harder stunts.

Jess Willard illustrates what decent living and exercise will bring. If he would use that fine strength to "knock out the devil" I would be happy. Every young person should exercise properly to bring the God-made body into its finest usefulness. That is why part of the $50,000 now being raised by Grace Methodist Church will be used for a gymnasium, bowling alley and playgrounds

If they are forced to go to work they find themselves ready to tackle the daily grind with vim and vigor. And another thing. Good health means a cheery disposition. A friend of mine, looking at pictures of my little Zelda and Frances (my other girl is only a baby and hasn't even been named yet) said to me, "Well, I suppose you'll be marrying them off some day?" I replied that I figured they would probably marry, but that I wasn't worrying about it and I hoped they never would. A lot of women think that if they get married they have fulfilled their purpose in life; in other words they make that their life's ambition. I believe this is the wrong idea.

I believe in woman suffrage, and I also believe that a woman should tackle life just like a man does. I am going to have my girls taught something useful. I am going to bring them up to be independent of any man. One of them has shown a knack of drawing. Fine say I! Let her become an artist if she wants to, and draw for the papers and magazines.

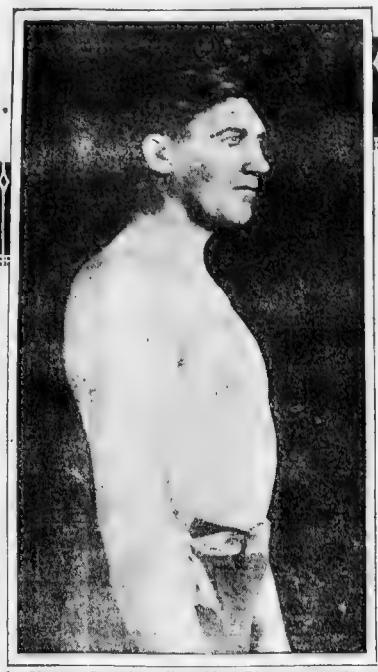
Maybe I am getting away from the subject of physical culture a little, but I am so wrapped up in my girls that I find it hard to stop talking about them. If any of you older readers have daughters you know how it is yourself. But supposing they do marry, which is, of course, the thing to expect, I will feel satisfied that they will prove to be good mothers and bring up their children in the way they should be brought up. Now let us get back to the subject of daily exercising. I believe in dwelling on the don'ts a whole lot. I have given you the "do's" and the "don'ts" in the breathing exercises, and now I speak of cold baths. I don't believe in cold baths for everyone, and I strongly advise against giving small boys and girls cold baths. In some instances they may be of benefit, but I would not try them unless I had a doctor's advice.

A bath of tepid water as near the temperature of the body as possible is a good thing, but a sudden shock of icy water on a young body will do more harm than good. Of course the best part of a bath isn't the bath at all. That sounds funny, but I refer to the towel rubbing afterward. That should take your special attention. Rub your body hard all over and don't miss that spot between your shoulders that is so hard to reach. In another article I will illustrate, in pictures for which I specially posed, how to thoroughly dry all parts of the body.

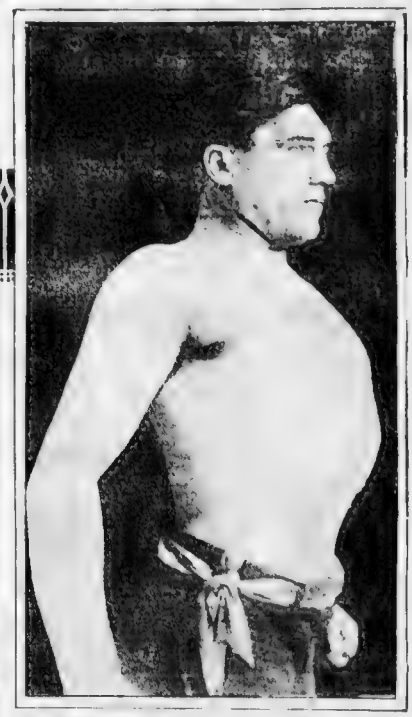
An Endorsement of the Shower Bath

I want to go down on record as favoring the shower bath. This is by far the best way to bathe at home. You get clean water all the time, and you get it under pressure. If you can, take nothing but shower baths, and you will be cleaner for them. But a whole lot of people don't even know how to take a shower bath properly. That sounds absurd, but it's true. Taking a shower bath doesn't alone mean that you stand underneath the spray cap and turn on the water. If it is a cold shower you are taking, this form of shower is not only wrong but harmful.

1.—Getting Ready—Chest and Lungs Contracted.



2.—Normal Position—Breathing Through the Nose.



3. Chest and Lungs Expanded to Their Utmost.

I will say, by the way, that I thought, like nearly everybody else, that there was oil, Jess [illegible] take a shower—just get under and turn on the tap, but a doctor friend of mine, whose advice I have heard backed up by many others, put me wise. To get a healthful effect [illegible] walk too far the first time if you're not used to it. Walk half a mile for a couple of days, then a mile, and add to it a little each day. You'll still have plenty of time for the auto, and you'll enjoy it more because your liver will be in better shape.

I am sorry that the bicycle has gone out of fashion in the cities although in the country I still see a [illegible] is nothing to a wheel for exercise. If not overdone, and within reach of nearly everyone. Every boy who lives in the country should have a bicycle. I don't recommend them in the city because, unless you live in the suburbs or outskirts, as you have to keep looking out for automobiles all the time.

Proper Clothing Important for Health

Now let me talk to you a little about clothes, a most important part of your physical training. I am not going to talk to you about styles because I don't know anything about that and [illegible] nothing to do with it unless it's some crazy fresh style that would make you expose your chest in Winter time, or hobble up your body in the Summer. I consider that the average person would have enough common sense to avoid fads like [illegible] of all you want to figure that the body needs a free air it can get. Air and sunlight.

Moving Pictures

By HARLOW HARL.

As "The Birth of the Nation" moves along on its re-engagement run at the Tremont Theatre its wonderful magic of stage craft impresses itself more and more upon the playgoer. The genius of the production leaves one fixed idea in the mind of the average person who sees it—and that is as a result. In that one item you will find the biggest element of the photoplay's success. The real keynote to D. W. Griffith's work of building this production was his fastidious attention to thorough research and his care in the reproduction of scenes of great historical import. That much of that this entailed I feel sure. The way he gathered atmosphere for his scenes showing the days [illegible]

In developing [illegible] historical background [illegible] the Birth of a Nation, Mr. Griffith [illegible] our universally professors to [illegible] the records and [illegible] dramatic interest [illegible] ing work [illegible] which we [illegible] One in part color in snow [illegible] of the great picture which lasts but the fraction of a second and yet it opens up an interesting viewpoint.

This is the scene in which President Lincoln is noticed to feel a brief chill and a ring to pull his coat about his shoulders while he sits in the presidential box at Ford's Theatre watching the performance of "Our American Cousin."

In every important move of his career Mr. Lincoln had experienced a night or two previous a strange dream. In this recurring dream he always saw a great steamboat steam out into a broad river and make its way down a beautiful stream.

On the night before the assassination Mr. Lincoln had an unusual [illegible] in a different way. This time he saw the boat on which [illegible] from its moorings and float down the river at the mercy of the current. The dream had played such a part in his life that the new turn of it depressed the President all day. By nightfall he had shaken off the feeling of dread and was in fine spirits.

Timing his action on the [illegible] other facts it develops that at the instant Mr. Lincoln felt this strange chill [illegible] a silent signal pulled his great [illegible] of his associates, John Wilkes Booth [illegible] thought to have saved the theatre and was making his way to the private box. Mystics have made much of this incident and see in it an unexplained phenomenon by which Mr. Lincoln unconsciously felt the cull of approaching death. It was but a few moments later that the fatal shot was fired which ended his great career. The scene is but a momentary flash in the action of Griffith's picture but is illustrative of the profound detail with which he has filled his story.

Nantasket Season Popular as Ever

Excellent running time, [illegible] safe steamers, and an hour's interesting sail down the harbor are three good reasons why Nantasket Beach is New England's popular seashore resort. Even though you do not have a cottage at the South Shore you must remember that Saturday and Sunday will give you an opportunity to take advantage of this sail, down the harbor. Pemberton Inn and the hotel are now open.

Norumbega Park.

Norumbega opened its gates for the nineteenth season yesterday. As always noted for its beautiful floral displays, this year surpasses all others in point of variety and magnificence. Especially attractive is the river bank promenade with the charming view of the Charles and its canoe activities. An excellent vaudeville program has been arranged for the attraction in the big steel open-air theatre. The latest and best moving pictures are always presented here. A Sunday concert bill will be given tonight.

TATTEN TAKES THE NAME OF O'LEARY

Unlike the Hogan Case, It Was Just as Easy as Rolling Off a Log for Former Medway Man

Hogan was [illegible] but [illegible] This is a [illegible] name. But [illegible] Tatten. Make your [illegible] as [illegible] as [illegible] you [illegible] after it's a.

The attention of Mr. Edward Joseph Hogan of No. 77 Westland avenue—whose name still is Hogan—is respectfully called to the performance of Mr. Henry Tatten, formerly of West Medway, now of Louisville, Ky., of Mexico and other places.

Mr. Tatten has just accomplished what must strike Mr. Hogan as next to impossible—he has had his name changed in a Massachusetts court as easily as rolling off a log.

Mr. Tatten journeyed up to his old home from the South, had a petition filed to take the name of O'Leary and then appeared [illegible] petition [illegible] Dedham Probate Court by Judge Flint. Mr. Tatten had prepared [illegible] Mr. Tatten did not even remain North for the court proceedings.

On the other hand—Mr. Hogan has made repeated efforts to shed the name "Hogan" for "Homan" or "Homan" and is still on his way. Mr. Hogan has made real history in his efforts, but has not had to order any new name-plate engraved by his stationer so far.

It would be almost cruel if anybody should insist on telling how easy Mr. Tatten made himself Mr. O'Leary.

Mr. Hogan, it will be recalled, was caught in his various petitions by Robert S. Homans of the Back Bay.

But nobody interfered with Henry Tatten. About three weeks ago Mr. Tatten strolled into the office of the Norfolk Probate clerk at Dedham and said to Assistant Registrar Thomas V. Nash:

Mr. Nash handed out the proper blank form, and Mr. Tatten became busy on it. Doubtful about a few points, he asked Mr. Nash some questions and finally offered to hire the [illegible] is lawyer for the proceeding. Mr. Nash said that was [illegible] for the county already [illegible] set as counsel for Mr. Tatten. The latter said he knew no lawyers around here, when in walked James Sweeney, attorney, of Quincy. Mr. Nash indicated Brother Sweeney, who put the petition in shape.

The reason stated in the petition for the desired change of name was that for fourteen years Mr. Tatten had been known as O'Leary and desired to make it legal and final.

Having seen his petition fixed, Mr. Tatten settled with Lawyer Sweeney, said that any mail would get him addressed in care of J. E. O'Leary at Louisville, Ky., should be forwarded. J. E. O'Leary is a friend of Henry, and it is thought his name [illegible] a choice.

He dropped in at the home of his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Tatten of Summer street, West Medway, for a visit, then returned South.

The petition was heard and granted last week by Judge Flint in the Norfolk Probate Court, and Tatten is now O'Leary.

It seems that Henry Tatten left West Medway fourteen years ago, when he was twenty years old; became a jockey, rode until he was too heavy, went to Mexico, acquired money and wealth and was forced to flee when the Mexican civil war came into his neighborhood.

Some of his property was destroyed, and he now has a $12,000 suit against the Mexican government. He was known in Mexico as O'Leary, and he thinks, for one thing, that his right for his mining interests will be helped if he is O'Leary legally as well as popularly.

Meanwhile Edward J. Horan is seeking naturalization, and attorney Edward M. Shanley, "friend of the people," who fought the Hogan name to a standstill, says he is now going into the Federal Court and oppose Hogan's citizenship.

FROM LIFE—PRETTY PICTURE, ISN'T IT?

It will not surprise you to hear that this gentleman of Holland believes that women should not go to the polls and vote. The place for woman in his opinion is THE TOW PATH. He is not so different from a great many American gentlemen who think that woman's place is THE HOME.

IT was a pleasant day in Holland. The water was smooth, the man who owned the boat was comfortable. His pipe drew well; he had eaten plenty; he admired the scenery and the world as it is.

The women were harnessed as you see them here. Tad did not follow the sketch closely in this drawing; he has the women standing up straight as they pull the boat with the muscles of their necks.

They were perspiring, and there was a look of distress on their faces entirely absent from that of the man who owned the boat and rode on the load as they pulled.

The original of this cartoon by Tad is a valuable, striking big pen-and-ink drawing. We are going to have it neatly framed and present it to some anti-suffrage association. It ought to suit exactly. The anti-suffragists believe that woman's place is the kitchen. This Dutchman, getting the fresh air, believes that woman's place is the home, except when it is the towpath.

Tens of thousands of men worse than this owner of a little canal boat in Holland, think that woman's place is the kitchen or the factory, the cannery, the cotton mill.

The anti-suffrage-clinging-vine lady, this gentleman of Holland, those who make money by child labor and those who get their fortunes by grinding women up in the mills, all agree upon one thing.

THEY ARE AGAINST VOTES FOR WOMEN.

Every anti-suffrage association ought to have this cartoon framed beside a picture of a woman chained to a cooking stove. And, underneath, they ought to have these words prettily written on a sign ornamented with daisies and forget-me-note: "Why change conditions which are perfect?"

The owner of this boat, dear anti-suffrage ladies, believes with you that women have all they need, and that they may safely trust "to the chivalry of men."

When you anti-suffrage women dress yourselves neatly, powder the tips of your noses and go to your meetings you supply the whiskey sellers and the rotten politicians with ammunition to fight against votes for women.

You may say that we do not harness women to canal boats in the United States. That is true, for gasoline and mules are cheaper than women over here.

We harness women to machines in box factories that wear them out before they are twenty. That is worse than pulling a canal boat. For the woman who pulls a canal boat at least works slowly, and in the fresh air; in spite of the hard work she gets fat and may live to be old.

We fasten little girls over here to machinery in cotton mills, ruin their bodies with nervous exhaustion and curse the generation of which they are to be the mothers.

You anti-suffrage women are the delight of judges who declare that it is unconstitutional to protect a working woman against man's brutal covetousness. You are the protectors of the legislators who devise and support laws to make women and their children work double hours because profit demands it.

You anti-suffragists are the best friends of the manufacturers of whiskey. Those manufacturers count upon you to keep the vote from women. And although many of you don't know it, it is the whiskey manufacturer and the whiskey dealer who most willingly supply money for your anti-suffrage campaigns.

And some of the admirable "home-sweet-home, trust-to-dear-man's-chivalry, don't-go-out-of-your-sphere" speeches that you listen to are made by anti-suffrage ladies, PAID FOR THEIR TROUBLE, DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY, BY THE WHISKEY DISTILLERS AND THEIR AGENTS.

Fortunately, some of the States in our country have given women the vote. And in every State where women vote their demand for their rights has been justified by the actions of women already voting.

This year in New York an effort will be made to do justice to women, and give them their share in government.

Among all the speakers who will argue against giving the vote to women there is none who can give a better argument than this Dutch canal boat owner gives for the condition of affairs which he represents. He says: "Everything is all right. What are you bothering about? These women are happy; they like to pull the boat; it is good for them, strengthens their necks. And it is particularly good for me. I need rest to think just how and where I will sell this load, and I need the cool air on my intelligent, fevered brow. Give these women the vote and they would sulk, and Christian civilization would go to smash."

Opponents of women suffrage in the United States, although they may not realize it, talk in the same way. They think that women harnessed to cooking stoves, sewing machines, canning factory machines, cotton mill machines and scrubbing brushes, should be happy and contented, not encouraged to go out of their sphere.

They ask, "What would happen to the world if women became discontented, and had a chance to prove it?"

The owner of this canal boat in Holland feels toward the women pulling the boat about as the owner of a canal boat in the State of New York feels toward the mules pulling his boat. He thinks the mules are doing what they ought to do. And so they are—THE MULES. But women have been treated like mules about long enough in Holland, AND IN THE UNITED STATES.

Workingmen especially ought to realize that giving the votes to women will mean protecting the interests of all workers.

Where would YOU be if working MEN could [illegible]? There was a time in the United States, you must know, when the workingman was not allowed to vote. And that day existed long after the Declaration of Independence.

The worker once had to own a certain amount of property in the United States before he could vote. And at that time THERE WAS JUST ONE MECHANIC IN THE UNITED STATES EARNING A DOLLAR A DAY, ALL THE YEAR AROUND. His case was so remarkable that a great historian pointed it out as intensely interesting.

And in that day, when the ordinary working man was not allowed to vote, when his "betters" gave the same arguments against male WORKERS voting that you give now against women voting, do you know what one of the Presidents of the United States said?

He said that the country was going to smash, because he could no longer hire a steady, reliable workman for less than one hundred dollars a year—about thirty cents a day.

Workers realized fortunately that they needed the vote for themselves, and they GOT it here, in England and elsewhere.

Why haven't they brains enough to know that what they need for themselves they need for their wives and daughters?

For one prosperous man there are ten workers. For one anti-suffrage lady, with nine kinds of jewelry and nine kinds of perfume to [illegible] a nuisance, there are ten women wives, daughters and mothers of workingmen.

Don't you realize that when you give the vote to women YOU GIVE AT LEAST TEN TIMES AS MANY VOTES TO THE WORKING CLASS AS TO ANY OTHER CLASS?

And don't you think there is room for improvement among the working class even yet?

It is true that the President of the United States no longer complains that he can't hire a first class man for less than one hundred dollars a year. But even if we have got beyond that stage, don't you think there is room for improvement?

And don't you think that you and your wife and your mother and your sisters SHOULD VOTE TOGETHER TO MAKE THINGS BETTER?

Don't you think that the woman who runs out into the street to keep her child from being crushed ought to be able to vote as well as the control of streets?

Don't you think the woman who scrapes together the money to pay the rent WHICH PAYS THE TAXES, ought to vote to decide what should be done with the taxes?

The thing to note is that she pays for food of average value WHERE DO THEY GET THEIR MONEY [illegible]

It would be a good idea to give the women, out of their allowance, must be [illegible] of the Sugar Trust, Beef Trust, Steel Trust, Gas Trust, the right vote on the privileges of those trusts.

Working MEN are just one half of the working class. Their condition has been better since they, THE MEN, were allowed to vote, to protect their own interests.

Would not their condition be twice as good IF THE OTHER HALF OF THE WORKING CLASS, [illegible] were also allowed [illegible] to protect their interests and the interests of their sons.

It is not a "class" argument. Not at all. The increase of the prosperity of the MASS [illegible] ease of the prosperity of the fortunate individual.

When workingmen in America made [illegible] day, and only one of them averaged one dollar a year round, there were not the rich men that [illegible] now.

As the working class has advanced [illegible] thanks to the vote, THE SO CALLED UPPER CLASSES THE RICHER AND MORE FORTUNATE HAVE ADVANCED IN PROSPERITY.

Increase the voters, add to the intelligence of the voters by including women, make the country really a republic by freeing one half of the population from a condition of slavery, and you will benefit every class.

If you lived in Holland, if your wife and sister were hitched to this boat, wouldn't you give them the right to vote if the vote would help to cut the rope and put a mule in their place?

Don't you know that in the United States there are millions of women no better off than these. AND WORSE OFF? And don't you think that workers ought to have the intelligence to let women use for their protection the same weapons that workmen have used to protect themselves—THE BALLOT?

His Ringing Words to GIRLS AND MOTHERS

Somebody has said "God could not be everywhere, so He gave us mothers."

No woman was ever ruined that some brute of a man did not take the initiative

The girl who waits to be chosen thinks it is better to take what she can get than to lose any chances.

I tell you, girls, the fellows always have a lot of you on a string; then they flip a coin to decide which one.

If men had half as much grit as the women there would be different stories written about a good many homes.

One reason why we have so many whip-poor-will widows around the country—they married a drinking man.

God pays a good mother as no one else can pay her. The devil will also pay the mothers if they fail, pay with hell now and hereafter.

Thank God there are still a few old-fashioned mothers left, but like the veterans of the Civil War, they are becoming a vanishing remnant

I believe if the motherhood of this country was no better than the manhood, God would dump the whole thing into hell and quickly stop it.

Many a woman is an old maid because she wanted to do her share of the courting. Don't get excited, and don't try to hurry things along.

If you mothers would be more careful about that young buck who comes shying around your girl she wouldn't be going down the line tonight.

Rev. William Ashley Sunday

A lot of you women go off to the show and see a lot of girls dancing around without enough clothes on to flag a hand-car or make a tail of a kite.

Some girls will walk the streets and pick up every Tom, Dick and Harry that will come across with the price of an ice cream soda or a joy ride.

Girls, don't flirt. Don't forget that men take you at your own estimate; they size you up according to your dress and according to your actions.

A girl who flirts with every young lobster should be backed into the barn and her oversupply of affection taken out by a No 11 slipper laid across her.

Where is there a woman beaten down in sin that would not like to return to the days when, pure as the morning dew, she knelt by her mother's side?

Some of you women will sweat your bangs out straight in the social whirl with a smile, but put you in a prayer meeting and you are as stiff as you can be.

If our girls would take a higher stand and say, "No, I will not keep company with you unless you live the way I want you to," there would be better men.

The women are silly, frivolous, extravagant. They have thrown to the winds all modesty, prudence, religion and the virtues that are so attractive in women

I never saw one boy reach the pinnacle of righteousness who had an empty-headed, low down, gum-chewing, society quibbling, theatre-going woman for a mother

Young girls don't go with that godless, sneering young man that walks the streets smoking cigarettes He would not walk in the streets with you if you smoked cigarettes

It is as hard to pass off a girl that has been pawed over by a different fellow six nights a week with the lights turned down as it is to fatten sheep on pineapple ice.

The mother who is unfaithful to her trust commits one of the greatest sins in the sight of God. A mother's touch has power to move multitudes to salvation or damnation

If mothers were as careful about the books their children read, or the company they keep, there wouldn't be as many girls in the red light district or as many boys in the penitentiary

Mothers who allow their sixteen year old daughters to go joy-riding at 2 o'clock in the morning with youths of weak morals and weak purses are only opening the door to disaster

Girls, don't transfer the love that God gave you or bestow it upon some brindle-nosed pup or Spitz. Cats and dogs are all right in their place, but it is out in the kennel somewhere

"As Is the Mother, So Is the Daughter." Ezekiel.

[illegible] that dance [illegible]
[illegible] despicable low down [illegible]
[illegible] it cause more ruin than [illegible]

[illegible] power on earth, a mother's love A mother [illegible] love It the devil's self in hell [illegible] mother love flamed up for the first time in

W[illegible] than mother [illegible] men in prison who have damned their mothers They became their mothers for their being what they [illegible]

Father [illegible] the booze and [illegible] side; but [illegible] stand by the [illegible] keep the little band together [illegible] manicure her finger nails [illegible] washboard to do it

Who is to be [illegible] the crowded prisons, [illegible] mothers" Who is more to blame for the crowded [illegible] the mothers who let the [illegible] and the street with [illegible] Tom, Dick and Harry

Many a girl has found [illegible] would have been a good deal easier to die an old maid than to have said "Yes" and become the wife of some cigarette [illegible] damnable libertine

Girls I'd rather be a weakened, dried up, nervous tea drinking, hatchet faced old maid, with a house full of dogs and cats, than married to a whiskey soaked, red eyed, shaky miserable specimen of a jug handle of a husband

Many a young girl when her mother is trying to get her not to go on the streets and to be in at decent hours, [illegible] but by and by she begins to awaken to the fact that she was a miserable little fool and her mother had some sense

I would rather that my daughters [illegible] hole through the fence than chance partners six nights a week with the parlor lights out. If you have a daughter who does that take a Gatling gun, cut a hole in the ceiling and watch him

Hear me, girl. When a young man asks you to marry him inform him that you are not running a whiskey cure establishment. If he doesn't think enough of you to quit boozing before he marries, you can bet your life he won't [illegible] afterward

Girls, don't go with a fellow whose reputation is bad Everybody knows it is bad, and if you are seen with him you will lose your reputation; and they might as well take you to the graveyard and bury you when your reputation is gone

Some girls marry for novelty and some marry for a home Some fool girls marry for money, and some girls marry a young buck to reform him, and they are the biggest fools in the bunch There are no old maids—there are only ladies in waiting

Girls, when some young fellow comes up to you and ask the greatest question that you will ever be asked or called upon to answer, next to the salvation of your own soul, what will you say? "Oh, this is so sudden." That is all a bluff You have been waiting for it all the time

We want girls who form lofty ideals of womanhood, who think more of decency than dress, gentleness than grossness who will grow up to be good women, loyal wives and fond mothers, who do not despise the kitchen, who can make bread as well as fudge, who can distinguish a gentleman from a scoundrel, who prefer a workingman for a husband rather than a loafer or a dude

Moral and Religious Questions from Troubled Readers

LETTERS from Elizabeth Gale, asking "IF NOBODY CAN BE A CHRISTIAN WHO DANCES," and from Morris E. Richards, inquiring whether Christ literally meant that NO RICH MAN COULD ENTER INTO THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, were printed recently on this page, and some of the answers received are printed today. Elsewhere on this page is another interesting question from a reader and the replies to this and other questions which have already been printed will be published next Sunday.

Don't Live as Though Material Things Were Life's Only Realities.

By REV. HOWARD C. ROBBINS,
Rector Church of the Incarnation, New York.

WITH reference to the letter which you kindly submitted to me for consideration, I think that your correspondent would find help if he were to study the text quoted (St. Matthew 19-23) in its connection, and especially in connection with the parallel passage in the second Gospel (St. Mark 10.24-27).

In dealing with the rich young ruler who desired to become one of his disciples, Jesus was dealing with an individual man whose weakness was evidently his trust in riches. We read that "he went away sorrowful: for he was one that had great possessions"

Zaccheus was also a rich man, but Jesus did not call upon him to relinquish all his possessions. When he voluntarily announced his intention of giving away part of them, Christ said: "This day is salvation come to this house"

Joseph of Arimathea was a rich man; so, probably, was Lazarus; but we do not read that in their case wealth stood in the way of their spiritual welfare. So the command to the young ruler was evidently an individual injunction, and not a rule which all Christians are called upon to follow, regardless of circumstances or their attitude toward their wealth

The best commentary on this difficult saying is the one which our Lord himself makes in Mark 10:24: "And the disciples were amazed at His words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard it is for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!"

Trust in riches, as Mackennal has observed in a thoughtful commentary on the passage, is not confined to the rich. "If only I had a little more," say one and another, say almost all. "If I had a little more, what a different man I should be! My piety would so gain if I were delivered from my cares: I could serve God so fully if I had but a competency!" Since all are seeking to be wealthy, since all are showing their trust in riches, who then can be saved? Men are seeking possessions as if these could ensure everything; as if possessions were the highest end of life. So writes Mackennal, and I think he has justly interpreted the passage.

So also wrote St. James, who quoted Jesus more than any of the later writers of scripture, and charged the rich that they "be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God" His advice is pertinent for all, rich or poor. Worldliness is not confined to any one class of society It exists wherever men are under the bondage of the senses, believe only in material things, and live as though the things that they can see and handle were the only realities of life A sheep can make that much out of his existence, and "is not man better than a sheep?"

Why Does God Not Reveal Himself?

To the Editor

I am not a Christian. But if this does not bar me out from your questions, I would like you to print this. It has bothered me greatly, and if my question can be satisfactorily explained I will gladly join the church.

In the last twenty centuries, since Christ was on earth, we have made great progress in every field of human interest and concern except in the one most vitally important of all—real knowledge of God

Why has every searcher after purely scientific, mechanical and material things been richly rewarded, while not one single new spiritual thing has been revealed? Everywhere we look we see how the material secrets of nature have been pried open and put to use and advantage But have we found out even one single new fact about our heavenly Father, about heaven, about the life beyond the grave or any of the other things of supreme importance to the soul of man?

Why has the door been opened to the scientist and the unbeliever and closed to the eagerly inquiring Christian?

EVANGELINE S. ROBBINS

No, memories come [illegible] to be recounted.

But Hollis and Ston[illegible] and Holworthy (dignified [illegible] of seniors) look not a day older than they did then, and as I contemplate them, and drift back in spirit to that day, I catch myself feeling as much a boy as I did then.

There is Massachusetts, too, oldest of all the dormitories, and even in my time beginning to be given up to "The Institute," and such-like impersonal uses.

On the top-floor of Stoughton the Hasty Pudding Club used to have its habitation, and I can feel Dick Dinsmore's clutch on my arms as we took him up for his initiation. Poor little Dickie! I whispered a word of encouragement to him, in his blindfolded state, as we mounted the [illegible]s. I had no business to do it, of course, but he seemed really scared. Dickie underwent, more than thirty years ago, an initiation more wonderful than that of the Hasty Pudding. Peace be with him!

This Time-phantom is a most bewildering spirit. I knew this place so well, that the new buildings standing about on all sides are in a way invisible to me; they are apparitions which have no right to be there, and would vanish at a closer look. Nay, all my own biography subsequent to my college years seems like some tale read in a book and when I go back to my Hollis room, I shall find a note from Hunnewell, reminding me that our college crew meets down at the boathouse at [illegible] o'clock sharp. "Don't be late again!"

That reminds me of the gymnasium, where we developed our heroic proportions under the easy supervision of the gigantic Mol[illegible], most amiable and in[illegible]t instructors.

I feared it was gone, and had a shock of pleasure when I found it still standing in its old place near the base of the Delta. But I did not venture too near, [illegible] Mo[illegible]s able and [illegible]dine successor trains [illegible]porary athletes in [illegible]other and more august edi[illegible]. But naughty men grew to [illegible]tiness in the old building. [illegible] Poor had an arm that [illegible]ave made that of Longf[illegible]llow's Blacksmith's look like an infant's; Curtis was as formidable a giant as Praxiteles ever modelled; and I recall with emotion how I saw Bill Blaikie shove up the 98-pound dumbbell; for that was the heavyweight era in physical training. Ned Fenno's shoulders and torso, too, were a sight for the gods. The famous Winship, who lifted three thousand pounds, was a little before my day. The story of our gymnasium would be a story!

The thought of Longfellow took me back to Brattle street, up which I pursued my way with somewhat doubtful steps, for one never knows what may happen in these new days. But I need have had no fears in this case; sentiment is not dead in Cambridge, and the town will hardly outlast the love and honor for the poet.

The street is better kept and more beautiful than in the sixties, and an admirable taste has presided over the new houses, which are so designed as to harmonize with the olden time. Color and form have been carefully considered, so that a recent erection easily takes its place in the picture. Nevertheless, the magic brush of time confers a spiritual grace which our art cannot rival.

Longfellow's house looks its honorable part even more satisfyingly than it did while he yet lived in it. The tints upon it are delicate and subtle, and its withdrawal from the street, on a slight eminence, seems responsive to the feeling in the heart for that which is sensitive and lofty, yet close to common sympathies.

In my Evangeline, Excelsior, and Hiawatha period it was my good fortune to visit a good deal at this mansion, and it always struck me that the house and its occupant were in some way corollaries or alternatives of each other; no other shelter was delightful enough for the poet, and no poet but Longfellow could have rhymed so well with the habitation.

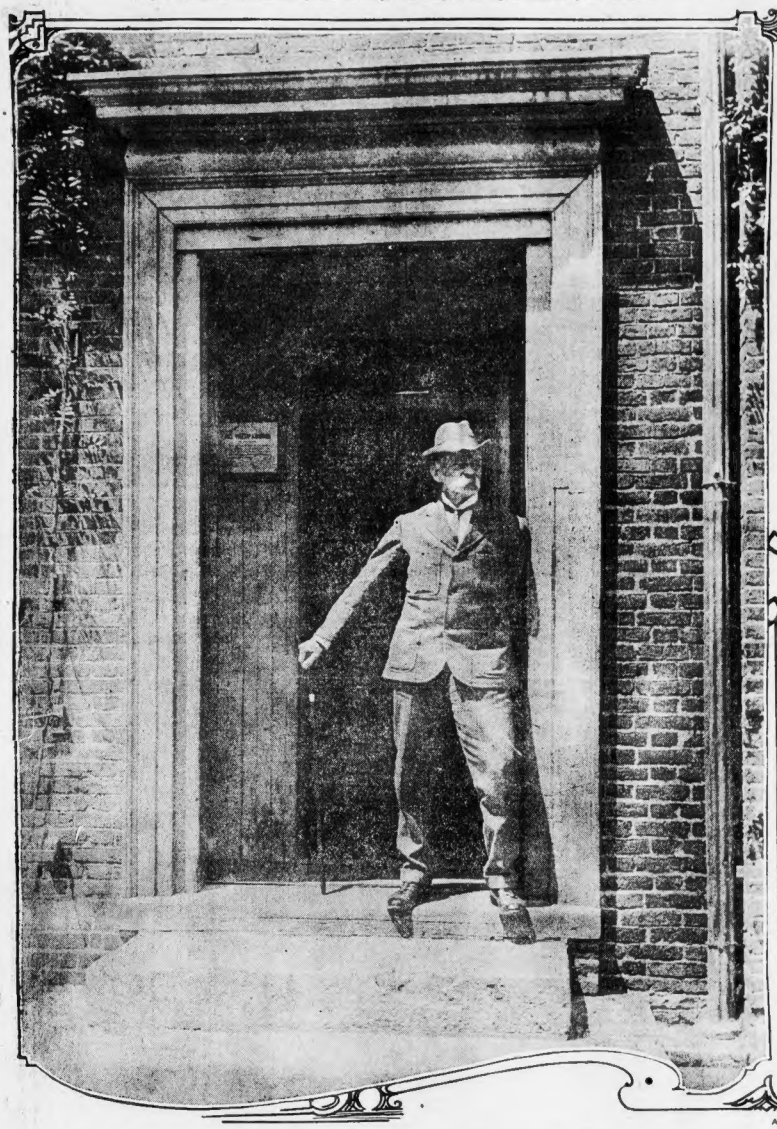
Today, when only the spirit of Longfellow remains to us, the house itself seems to have acquired a finer spirituality; and on this day when I stood before it, the tender green of the shrubbery and trees appeared to glow with the light that never was on sea or land, the consecration, and the poet's dream.

How genial, too, was the inspiration that created that little park on the opposite side of the

Recalls the Days of Longfellow and Lowell

"Old Washington Elm More Infirm Than Then, and Spread of Its Branches Less"

"Hollis and Stoughton and Holworthy (dignified abode of seniors) look not a day older than they did then, and as I contemplate them from the doorway of Hollis, and drift back in spirit to that day, I catch myself feeling as much a boy as I did then."



"No one would mistake me for an undergraduate now, and yet I found the room in Hollis (No. 3 it was) where I abode as a freshman, and it looked just the same as it did a few days after my installation."

A pleasing incident of Mr. Hawthorne's visit to the James Russell Lowell house in Cambridge. Little Miss Frances Bigelow Davis gathered a nosegay of lilies of the valley and presented them to him.

way, with the memorial bust and its attendant figures! It makes a vista not too long for beauty, and long enough for love. The silent river flows away forever, and quiet Cambridge lies round about in its undemonstrative contentment.

In Lowell, the social quality was an intellectual growth rather than a native impulse, and his reserves and withdrawings, marked in his earlier life, were never wholly overcome even in his later public career.

Some close friends he had, and grappled them to his soul with hoops of steel; and he accepted mentally the brotherhood of humanity; but there was no spontaneous opening of the arms to the profanum vulgus.

The house called Elmwood indicates him well; the tall trees convey a warning of privacy; the formal straightness of the pathway from the gate to the portal, across the wide lawn, does not so much invite as seclude. We call him a humorist, but we think of his wit, and wit is always shining through the folds of his humorous gaberdine.

It was in my junior year that he, out of pure goodness of heart and for the sake of my father and his lifelong friend undertook to let the crude undergraduate come to his house of an evening and "read German" with him.

It was he who did the reading, and it was my privilege to listen to his interpretation of Goethe's Faust. But more than half of the evenings was spent in friendly talk, in which the youth was given fascinating glimpses into the halls and corridors of his rich and masculine mind. The tobacco jar stood between us, and the fire of hickory logs crackled on the hearth. The charm and value of culture in its best estate was revealed to me in those monologues courteously disguised as conversations. Years afterward I was to see London fascinated and charmed by him as I was then.

Gurney's room, in his bachelor days, was on the corner of the block nearly opposite the gates of the college yard. It was to his finishing touches during the six months before my matriculation at Harvard, and to his manful help throughout the stress of the actual examinations, that I owed my precarious inclusion on the freshman roster. Gurney was only a "tutor" at that time, though few scholars of wider and deeper attainments have ever attended a Harvard faculty meeting. I appreciated that later; at the time, I was awafe only of a loving friendliness, and I might almost say companionship that rendered my tri-weekly visits to him so many intervals of delight. he gave me, not Latin merely and mathematics, but flowers of worldly wisdom so aptly selected to admonish without too much surprising my raw age and intelligence, that it was only long afterward that I understood their value. And one evening, when, sitting too long at his open window, smoking his excellent mild cigars, it transpired that I had missed my last train for Concord, he would not hear of my returning on foot—an easy twilight stroll for me at that epoch—but insisted on going forth and hiring a buggy, in which he drove me, will-nilly, full half way to my destination, and only with reluctance suffered me to finish the distance in my normal fashion. For all these and countless other benefits I could make no return, and only now find my first opportunity so much as to record them.

Such friends as these did what men might to fill for me the place of the father whom I so early lost. With that event, too, my Harvard memories are intimately entwined. On the 20th of May, 1864, I awoke to the consciousness that I was a full-fledged and initiated member of the D. K. E.'s, having passed the perilous bridge the night before, under the humane ghidance of MacBurney of '65, later the famous surgeon, but then most renowned as bow of the Harvard crew—the "Varsity," as it would now be termed.

It was a lovely morning, and about half way toward noon I happened to be strolling with a companion down the street which skirts the Common on the east and south. After passing the church, we were met by a classmate whose serious look, as his eyes met mine, arrested my attention. I was so complacent over my recent achievement that I was prompted to rally him on his grave demeanor: "Cheer up, Bo'! the world is a good place, for all its shortcomings!" But he muttered, in a low voice, "There is bad news for you, Hawthorne!" and my thought leaped to dire possibilities. "My mother?" He shook his head, and with an effort brought out, "Your father!" I leaned against the rail, and could say nothing. I seemed to think nothing, for a while.

Today I passed over this same spot, nine years older than was my father when he died. The soft air and the sunshine were the same, too.

The old Washington elm is more infirm than then, and the spread of its branches less. I don't know what has become of the boys who did their boyish best to show their sympathy. One of them stayed with me all that day; for some reason I have forgotten I did not go to Concord until the day after.

On that day, James T. Fields, the publisher, accompanied me on the train; and a man in the seat in front of us, reading the morning paper, suddenly said to his neighbor beside him, "Hullo! Hawthorne's dead!"—"Is that so?" returned the other, indifferently. Fields patted my hand, as much as to say, "Never mind—they don't understand!" The indifference of the world, like the indifference of nature, shocks you at first; but after a time you understand that there is a kind of comfort in it. We need loneliness as much as sympathy.

Amid the likenesses and the unlikenesses of Cambridge to what it was, one feature struck me particularly, in these its university days, when the number of students is so manifold greater than it was in the 'sixties, the town does not seem nearly so much a student town as it did then.

But for the buildings in the college yard, I should not suspect it to be anything more than an urbane and agreeable abode of repose and culture.

When a class numbers a thousand, instead of a hundred, or seventy, or sixty, the class sentiment must necessarily become less vivid. And the actual circle of acquaintance of a man with his fellows must needs be restricted; before I left Harvard I knew every man of the four classes, besides many law-students and scientifics; and I have always thought that this large and varied acquaintanceship was one of the most valuable circumstances of a college career.

The things we learned from books become dim or are forgotten; but the friends we made, and our social standing among the multitude of different characters, is an excellent gauge of our future measurement in the world.

But I speak from the undergraduates' point of view, which may well be different from that of the ordinary resident. To a mere outsider, there can hardly be in the world a town more generally attractive than Cambridge.

EXPECT 30,000 AT MILITARY MASS IN FENWAY PARK

Fenway Park will be the scene today of a religious military ceremonial when the Boston Municipal Council and the United Spanish War Veterans will meet to attend military high mass for its deceased members.

The celebration of the military mass will be attended by an enormous concourse. Some 30,000 free seats are provided for the public. Invited guests will occupy reserved seats in the grandstand.

The soldiers will be drawn up in a hollow square surrounding the altar, at which at 10:30 o'clock, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Splaine, D. D., will officiate.

The mass will be preceded by a military parade of which Timothy W. Kelley will be chief marshal and Joseph P. Scott chief of staff.

The headquarters of the chief marshal will be established at Copley square, in front of the Public Library. Organizations will report their arrival to Chief of Staff Joseph F. Scott, as follows:

Celebration to Mark Monsignor Supple's Silver Jubilee

Parishioners of St. Hugh's and St. John's Preparing Program

A Native of This State, Has Had Notable Career in Priesthood.

The members of two Roxbury parishes St. Hugh's and St. John's, are busy on plans for the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the ordination of the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Patrick J. Supple, D. D. The festivities in honor of the Silver Jubilee are to be held in Hibernian Hall, Roxbury, on Tuesday evening, June 1.

Prominent citizens, who are members of the dual parish, are organized into committees, whose respective duties will be to care for the collection of a Jubilee program whose every detail will give adequate expression to the feelings held by all the people, gladness and affection towards their distinguished pastor.

Executive Committee.—Joseph H. O'Neil, K. G.; reception, H. F. Nash, K. G.; invitations, Rev. D. J. Whalen; concert, Robert H. Bryden; refreshments, Mrs. Thomas F. Dowling; printing, H. J. Foley; press, Robert T. Allen; music, Miss Anna Dorsey; testimonial, Miss Anna Doherty and Mrs. Robert T. Allen.

NATIVE OF HOLLISTON.

Mons. Supple first saw ours in Holliston, on March 14, 1865. He attended the public schools of his native town, graduating from the high school in 1881. In the Fall of that year he entered the Preparatory class of Boston College making the full four years collegiate course and was graduated with honors in June, 1885. He was selected by Archbishop Williams as the representative of the Diocese to be sent to Rome that year to complete his philosophical and theological studies.

In these latter branches he achieved the same distinction that had characterized his career in school and college. For the last three years of his Roman course he was a student of the Illustrious Cardinal Satolli, and at the end of his course passed successfully the examination leading to the Doctorate of Divinity in Theology.

He was ordained to the priesthood by Cardinal Parocchi in the Basilica of St. John Lateran on May 31, 1890, also the feast day of the Apostolic Delegate in Washington, His Excellency Monsignor Bonzano.

Returning to Boston that same year his first assignment was to St. Mary's, Dedham, where he remained for eleven months. For the next five years he was on assistant at the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, and afterwards for seven years at St. Peter's Church, Cambridge.

From the start he became a logician and preacher of the faith of Catholic teaching. The force and sincerity with which he put forward his message winning for him hosts of friends in every field of labor to which he was sent. He took deep interest even during the years of his curacy in educational questions and became known as one of the most ardent champions of Catholic education in the diocese.

One of his contributions published in the Pilot in defense of the teaching of his Alma Mater, Boston College, was read in every Jesuit refectory of the New York-Maryland province.

PASTOR OF ST. JOHN'S.

In the Fall of 1915 he went as Secretary to Cardinal O'Connell, then Bishop of Portland, on the mission sent by the Holy See to the Emperor of Japan.

In July, 1906, he was appointed to St. John's Parish, Roxbury, to succeed the Rev. Hugh F. Smith. During his pastorate he has completed the Church of St. Hugh's and has made many improvements in St. John's Church. He has continued his interest in all the great movements affecting the church's welfare and has been engaged in many activities requiring judgment and skill.

He was editor of the Pilot from April, 1906 to August, 1909, and many editorials written by him during this time were reproduced verbatim by the daily papers of Boston, notably the one in answer to President Eliot's "New Religion."

He has been one of the foremost champions of the Federation movement in the Archdiocese, appearing upon the public platform in many places where his strong and ringing addresses exerted a wide influence. His logical mind grapples directly with every question that he undertakes to discuss, while his power of expression and fluency of speech are never lacking. He has won a deservedly high place as a forceful speaker, and his well-reasoned addresses are always listened to with the greatest interest.

SERVICE RECOGNIZED.

In recognition of his great services to the church he was made a monsignor in December, 1901. Affable in demeanor, kind and considerate to everyone whom he meets, staunch and true to his friends, Monsignor Supple is universally regarded as a man of character and has legions of friends both within and without the diocese.

Two of Monsignor Supple's brothers also entered the ranks of the priesthood, making their theological studies in Rome and achieving the distinction of the Doctorate: the late Dr. David G. Supple and the Rev. James A. Supple, D. D., now serving in St. Mary's, Lynn.

The executive committee in charge of the jubilee is as follows:

Joseph H. O'Neil, Charles P. Hurley
P. A. Kearns, secretary, Rev. J. J. Crane

Removes Coarse, Bristly Growth of Hair

This method removes coarse, stubborn growths of hair as effectually as pastes and powders. Powders remove soft, downy ones. In referring to De Miracle, the original liquid depilatory which attacks hair under the skin as well as on the skin, Vogue says: "I know of none better." Only genuine publications of the highest character are quoted by us. Beware of so-called hair removers which are supposedly recommended through bogus quotations from so-called magazines which do not exist.—Advertisement.

A children's party was held in the school hall yesterday afternoon.

LYNN CONCERT PUT OFF.

The concert of the Cecilian Society of St. Mary's Church, Lynn, which was set for this afternoon, has been postponed until Sunday afternoon, May 30, owing to the indisposition of John McCormack, the noted singer. The concert will be in the Olympia Theatre and nearly 2,500 tickets have been sold.

CARDINAL AT DANVERS TODAY

On His Return from Gloucester, Where He Blesses Church Cornerstone.

This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock Cardinal O'Connell will lay the cornerstone of the new buildings of St. John's Preparatory College at Danvers.

The exercises will be largely attended by relatives of the students and outside friends of the college, which is now recognized in the Catholic educational world as one of the most successful and progressive schools for the higher training of boys to be found in the country.

An idea of the popularity and success of the college may be gained from the fact that its student roll has increased from forty in 1907 to 185 in the present year.

Credit for this phenomenal advancement of so young an institution of learning is due to the energy and devotion and progressive methods of Brother Benjamin of the Xaverian order who is the chief director of the college.

The buildings to be dedicated this afternoon, a dormitory and a classroom, are gothic in design. They are built of brick with stone trimmings.

Designed to harmonize with the older features of the college group and located in spacious grounds, with rugged nature on every side, those who attend today's ceremonies may see for themselves the promise of a great institution of learning in its immediate future.

This morning at ten o'clock Cardinal O'Connell will lay the cornerstone of the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester. Previous to the exercises there will be a parade of the various organizations of the parish, led by the Holy Name Society.

After the corner-stone ceremonies, the Cardinal will assist at solemn high mass, the celebrant of which will be Rev. William J. Dwyer, permanent rector of St. Ann's Church. He will be assisted by Rev. Charles W. Regan, pastor of All Saints Church, Roxbury, as deacon, and Rev. Myles D. Kiley of the Church of St. Francis de Sales, Roxbury, as subdeacon. The master of ceremonies will be Rev. Alfred J. McDonald of St. Ann's Church. The sermon will be preached by Rev. A. J. Pimentel, pastor of St. Anthony's Church, East Cambridge.

Working for May Party for Church

The parishioners of the Gate of Heaven Church, City Point, south Boston, are showing unusual interest in the annual garden party, held in June, on the grounds in the rear of the new church, Fourth and M streets, City Point. The committees are headed by the curates, Rev. John F. Burns, Rev. John O'Connell, Rev. Walter Lambert and Rev. Waldo C. Hasseufuss.

Many Operations Avoided

WHILE of course there are serious cases of feminine ills that nothing but a surgical operation will remedy, the indisputable fact remains that hundreds of operations have been avoided by the wonderful medicinal virtue of

and the very best proof of this is the unsolicited and grateful letters of the recovered ones themselves. By special permission we publish here four of them out of hundreds we have:—

Louisville, Ky.—"I think if more suffering women would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound they would enjoy better health. I suffered from a female trouble, and the doctors decided I had a tumorous growth and would have to be operated upon, but I refused as I do not believe in operations. I had fainting spells, bloated, and could hardly stand the pain in my left side. My husband insisted that I try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am so thankful I did, for I am now a well woman. I can better, do all my housework and take long walks. I never fail to praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my good health."—Mrs. J. M. Resch, 1909 W. Broadway, Louisville, Ky.

Decatur, Ill.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. Laura A. Griswold, 2300 Blk. East William Street, Decatur, Ill.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"My left side pained me so for several years that I expected to have to undergo an operation, but the first bottle I took of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of the pains in my side and I continued its use until I became regular and free from pains. I had asked several doctors if there was anything I could take to help me and they said there was nothing that I could take of. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. Griffith, 1588 Constance St., Cleveland, Ohio.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine.

Charlotte, N.C.—"I was in bad health for two years, with pains in both sides and was very nervous. I had a growth which the doctor said was a tumor, and I never would get well unless I had an operation. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I gladly say that I am now enjoying fine health."—Mrs. Rosa Sims, 16 Winona St., Charlotte, N.C.

It would seem wise before undergoing an operation to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

RELIABLE TESTIMONY.—All our testimonials are guaranteed to be genuine and truthful. They came to us entirely unsolicited and are sincere expressions of gratitude for actual benefits received from the medicine.—THE LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO., LYNN, MASS.

BROOKLINE MAIDENS IN FAIRY REVELS CHARM HOST OF ELDERS

SUCCESS LEADS THE PARISHIONERS TO PLAN OTHER BENEFIT UNDERTAKINGS.

The musical fete given by the parishioners of St. Aidan's Church, Brookline, at the Allston Theatre, Friday evening, for the organ fund of St. Aidan's Church, was one of the most successful undertakings which the parishioners ever had. Many events are to follow. The fund was started by a few personal contributions, following which Mrs. John O'Mealey opened her home in Brookline a few weeks ago for a musical. The fete was the first large undertaking of the parishioners and will be followed by a large bazar in November, to be held in Whiton Hall.

FAIRY DANCE IN "DREAM."

The opening number was a pantomime entitled "A Dream." It was presented by a little girl lost in the woods and falling asleep. A little fairy came out to play in the moonlight and discovered the little girl. The fairy brought a number of other fairies with her and they gathered about her and marveled at the little mortal. The little girl was awakened by the fairies and found that she had become one of them, but she had no star on her forehead like the real fairies. The fairies took one of the stars from the sky and crowned the little mortal with it. Great rejoicing was felt by all and the child joined in the revels with the fairies and finally fell down from exhaustion and became a mortal once again. The parts were taken by the following:

A Mortal ..... Helen Holland
First Fairy ..... Agnes Taff
Other Fairies—Geraldine Holland, Elinor Sheehan, Gertrude Cadigan, Louise Maher, Katherine Phelan, Margaret Ford, Elizabeth Hatch, Katherin Ceppi, Valleda Pike, Grace DeViney, Claire Dooley, Helen Toner, May Toner.

SONGS AND OTHER MUSIC.

Old English songs by Miss Marion Feeley, with a crinoline dance, accompanied by Miss Minnie Straton Watson as pianist, were greatly enjoyed. Miss Feeley possesses a remarkable voice and her rendition was much appreciated.

The members of the Brookline High School Mandolin Club rendered some fine selections. Marvin Kay was leader, while Henry Haynes, manager, presided at the piano. The club were: Misses Nelson, Cook, Roxbury, was the solo dancer in "La Rose." Her graceful dancing won much applause.

The minuet was one of the pretty dances that won much praise from the older people. The costumes were designed after those worn in the late seventies. In the dance were Miss Helene O'Mealey, Miss Jesse Beggs, Miss Constance Stack, Miss Marion Feeley, Milton Hareus, Randolf Johnston, Murray Feeley and William Turtle.

Excellent musical comedy selections were given by a double sextette of the younger set. Miss Florine Williamson, Miss Helen O'Mealey, Miss Ola Murray, Miss Grace McGinnis, Miss Marion Dooley, Miss Constance Stack, Elmer Howe, Murray Feeley, William Turtle, James Murray, Milton Hareus and Henry Bruno.

"AWAKENING OF SPRING."

"The Awakening of Spring," a pantomimic dance, was beautifully presented. The cast included: Queen of Eliland, Miss Helene O'Mealey; Elves, the Misses Agnes Taff, Margaret Ford, Helen Holland, Claire Dooley and Geraldine Holland; Sunbeams who included the Misses Gertrude Cadigan, May Toner, Grace DeViney and Helen Toner; Spring, Miss Marion Feeley, assisted by Spring Maidens, who were the Misses Ann Ford, Dorothy Richardson, Imelda Taff, Mae Holland, Dorothee Ellis and Dorothy Johnston.

The final number on the program was a tableau entitled "Peace." The cast was:

Peace ..... Miss Madeline Turtle
Happiness ..... Miss Marion Dooley
Prosperity ..... Miss Constance Stack
Belgium ..... Miss Freeda Dalton
France ..... Miss Marie Taff
England ..... Miss Nora Dalton
Germany ..... Miss Mildred Johnston
Turkey ..... Miss Leanore Stack
Austria ..... Miss Alice O'Connell
Russia ..... Miss Dorothee Ellis

Middle row, left to right—Imelda Taff and Dorothee Ellias as Spring Maidens; Helene O'Meley, as Queen of Eltland; Grace McGinnis as the Sun; and Marion Feeley as Spring.

BOSTON'S 5,000 GIRL STUDENTS PREPARE FOR HOMEWARD FLIGHT

Fair Conservatory and College Maids Admit Their Affections Are Divided on Going Away

By RUTH DARLING.

"They come from the ends of the four winds, from the north, south, east and west," these five thousand of talented girls who each season invade Boston's Back Bay and Fenway district to attend the various colleges and schools of music, art, oratory and the like, and who about now are turning their pretty faces homeward.

It is rather difficult when the time comes, too. It is a divided affection many of them have to offer to their home town—and perhaps a divided affection they have to offer the beaux they left behind them.

For—Boston is particularly fitted as a college town—because there are so many boys' colleges in it. After all the boys back home aren't so much. They were all right when the girls were back home in pigtails and gingham—but those Harvard, Tufts and Tech young men do seem the better in silk and coiffeur days.

And still—there are those, as in the drawing by Neil Brinkley in the illustration above, who, as they play soft nocturnes or maybe a little Mendelssohn at an evening who dream only of the hay back home and count the days till they may meet.

DIFFICULT TO BREAK AWAY.

"We are the happiest bunch of girls in Boston," said one, a gay, young senior, confident in soon possessing her diploma to take back home across the continent. "And yet," she continued, "though I haven't been home in two years, I hate to leave Boston, I love it so."

As I went from "there" to "there" asking girls what plans they had I found just a chain of radiant hope. Many already had engagements for concert work and a few are planning some further specialized study.

But symphonies and concerts cannot be talked of forever and the "light" bell over at the dormitories is rung all too soon in the daily life of the enterprise and vivacious young women students. Then down the dimly lighted corridors flit ghost-like figures and in another moment, Josephine and Alice are crowded in their quarters with Gladys and Mildred, in a room hung with college pennants and filled by the piano.

A GIRLISH LARK NOW AND THEN.

"Oh, Gladys, can you lend me a red middie tie to wear to the picnic tomorrow? Joe has borrowed mine," asks one.

"Course," whispers Gladys, "but who'll lend me a pair of blue silk stockings. I don't mind wearing lisle to church but for canoeing I prefer silk."

"And Jo, you lamb, please let me wear your nifty new sailor, the one with the streamers in the back. You know I need it worse then you do tomorrow—HE is to be there and I want to look good, beautiful and bright. I do so want to impress him, you might almost say, daze him. I think it is about time he was SAYING something."

"When I have a man," interrupted Alice, "I want him up among my friends and also, I am starving for food; haven't you anything to eat"

"We might make some fudge," suggested Gladys, "if Alice will go to Georgie's room and get the sugar. I saw her buy a whole pound yesterday; and Mildred you just creep into the kids' room and borrow their alcohol and I'll get the chafing dish ready."

When a full exchange of hats, gloves, ties and frocks had been made and all the fudge eaten the two visitors scampered back to their own room and in less than a wink were fast asleep as though they had been in their beds ever since the lights went out.

THE WITCHING HOUR.

It would be un-girl-like-sort of against nature—to live the years of school life and college without the midnight "rabbits" hastily cooked and leathery, but, oh, so delicious. And ice cream eaten with a visiting card at the witching hour is something devoutly to be enjoyed.

Life isn't too severe to be enjoyable.

In the pretty little drawing room each girl entertains her friends of both persuasions, but madame the preceptress meets and learns to know all the visitors of her protegees within her dormitory. "I am going to the conservatory and will be back at noon," is stated by Miss Junior or Miss Senior and the hour of departure and return is recorded by the constant hall attendant.

Miss Joe Carr of Memphis, Tenn., has a program arranged for a concert tour through the south. She is a piano soloist of marked talent, graduating under the instruction of Richard E. Stevens.

Another pianist of much promise is Miss Margaret Butman of Rearsport, Maine, who studied with Mr. De Vota.

Miss Georgia Alice Bassett, of Washington state, will leave immediately after commencement for home and after a period of rest and travel expects to take up concert work. Miss Bassett has a beautiful voice that has been trained by Charles White. Very talented, is the unanimous opinion of Miss Esther Jones, graduating as a soloist.

A COUSIN TO THE PRESIDENT.

Miss Louise Woodbridge, has not only the distinction of most unusual ability in piano work but is the first cousin of President Wilson and was born in Shanghai, China. She will have the honor of playing at commencement as a pupil of Clayton Johnes.

Miss Maud Briggs, graduating under the tutelage of Carl Peirce in violin is also the president of her sorority, the Alpha Chi Omega. Miss Briggs intends to return for some post-graduate work next year.

A lovely lyric voice has Miss Gladys Zimmerman. She is from Ohio and intends to go on the operatic stage.

Other students of fine records and bright futures are Miss Ava Dodge of Shingleville, Pa., Miss Katherine Crowley, Miss Esther Haley of Biddeford, Maine, who has had Miss Dean as her instructor and Miss Evelyn Gonder of Strasburg, Pa., who is called one of the most popular girls of her class.

EXAMS AND TESTS.

The strenuous days of "exams" and tests will be past history by next Saturday and then—just a riot of gayeties right up to Commencement Day.

The Nantasket picnic, which is an annual affair, comes on the fourth day of June. A boat is chartered and everybody goes. There will be a ball game between the faculty and the "frosh," a dance in the pavilion and bowling contests.

The final concert of the graduating class comes on June 14, and the class of 1915 has the distinction of giving three concerts this year which establishes a precedent in conservatory life.

Carl Farnsworth, the president of the class, will head the receiving line at the senior reception in Recital Hall, Friday June 18. The members of the faculty assisting are: Mr. and Mrs. Ralph L. Flanders, Mr. and Mrs. Timothee Adamowski, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Adamowski, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Chadwick, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Charles White and Miss Virginia Hickney.

The commencement exercises in Jordan Hall will be held at 3:30 in the afternoon of Tuesday, June 15, and in the evening the grand finale will be an alumni reunion at the Copley-Plaza.

LADIES' CATHOLIC CLUB RECEPTION

The twentieth anniversary of the Ladies' Catholic Club of Boston will be celebrated with a reception and musical at the Copley-Plaza on Thursday afternoon, June 10. Governor Walsh and Rt. Rev. Mgr. Splaine, D. D., will speak.

There will be an exhibition of the work done by the girls at the Ladies' Catholic Club house on Washington street, which will be one of the interesting things of the afternoon. The exhibition in past years has taken place at the association house, where the members and friends of the association have seen the wonderful work accomplished by children, their older sisters and mothers who belong to the various classes conducted by the club.

The officers of the club are: Miss Mary A. Barr, president; Mrs. James S. Fox, vice-president; Mrs. John M. Jackson, secretary, and Mrs. Daniel V. McLean, treasurer.

SOCIAL NOTES

Several whist parties have been conducted for the bazaar fund of St. Ann's Church, Neponset. Mrs. W. H. Whelan, Mrs. M. C. Carroll and Mrs. John Cronin held a very successful one in St. Ann's school hall last week. On Friday evening another one will be held in St. Ann's hall for the fund.

* * *

Miss Mary Regan Ashton gave a successful elocution recital in the Pierce building, Copley square, Friday evening.

* * *

The pupils of Miss Katherine G. Donovan gave a recital in Beacon Hall, Brookline, last evening. The program was varied and many new features were introduced.

* * *

A musical in aid of the coming lawn party of the Daly Industrial School will be held at the home of Mrs. Edward Sweeney of Adamsville this evening. Mrs. Sweeney has the assistance of a number of the members of the Daly Aid Club in the arrangements.

* * *

Members of St. Hugh's choir, Roxbury, are planning a social which will take place early in June. It will be held in the school hall and will be for the choir members and a few of their friends.

* * *

The annual festival in aid of the Destitute Catholic Children will be the largest Catholic festival to be held this month. Numerous whists, candy sales and dansants are being held for the festival fund. Articles of food, fancy work or anything suitable for a sale will be greatly appreciated by the nuns in charge and can be sent to the home any time before the festival, which will be held on Monday, May 31, in Mechanics Building.

* * *

CLUBS TO CLOSE UP THE SEASON

The concluding May parties of this week to be held under the auspices of the Counties Down, Roscommon and Sligo Associations will close the season's social affairs. Plans will then begin for the Summer outings in July and August.

Tuesday evening the County Down Association will hold a May party and dance in O'Connell Hall, Hibernian Building, 184 Dudley street, Roxbury. Michael McGreevy, Bernard Fitzsimmons, Mr. and Mrs. James Murray, Miss Teresa Heenan and a score of the members are working hard to make the party one of the most successful held this season.

Wednesday evening the Roscommon Benevolent Association will hold a May party in O'Connell Hall, the proceeds of which will go to the sick and death benefit fund. The committee includes Patrick F. Waldron, William J. Garrity, James T. Kinney, Mrs. Mary Wolfe, Miss Eileen Kelley and Mrs. Michael Gaughan.

The Waterford Association will hold a May and dancing party in Paine Building on Wednesday evening, May 26. The proceeds will be given to a worthy cause.

Sligo men and women will gather at Paine Hall on Thursday evening, May 27, for the annual Spring reunion of the County Sligo Benevolent and Protective Association. President John Boyle is being assisted by a corps of energetic members in making elaborate plans for the comfort of the one thousand guests who are expected.

All former residents of County Antrim now residing in Greater Boston desiring to join the newly organized County Antrim Association are requested to attend a meeting to be held tomorrow evening at 8 Warren street near Dudley street Terminal.

A solemn high mass for the repose of the souls of deceased members of the Roscommon clubs will be held at St. Peter's Church on Harrison Avenue at 9 o'clock on Memorial Day. Rev. Garrett J. Barry will be celebrant of the mass.

Extensive arrangements are being made by the Mayo Men's Benevolent Association for the anniversary exercises in memory of Michael Davitt. Martin T. Judge is chairman of the committee.

One meeting a month will be held during June, July and August by the delegates to the Central Council. It will be held on the first Tuesday at 8 o'clock.

HUSBANDS TO JOIN IN BRIDGE OUTING

Husbands of the members of the Twentieth Century Bridge Club will be included in the party of women who will close the festivities of the club with an outing, dinner and whist party at Pantoosee, Farms, Hanover, Wednesday, June 9.

Mrs. Richard A. Lynch has arranged the following committees:

Dinner will be served at 6 o'clock after which the members and their husbands will enjoy a game of bridge.

Plans were completed at the home of Mrs. William Hurley of Rockland, and Mrs. William A. Boudrot, treasurer, read her report on the recent charity ball at the Copley-Plaza. The proceeds of the affair were divided so that each member received an equal amount which she could devote to any charity in which she was interested.

Mrs. John Kent and Mrs. Eugene S. O'Neil of Brockton, Mrs. James W. Spence, Mrs. William Spence and Miss Mary Spence of Rockland were the guests of Mrs. Hurley at the meeting.

Taking Care of the French Army and Navy

The French Government, through the Minister of War and the Health Department, ordered 200,000 boxes of Cadum ointment for use by its Army and Navy during the present war. Great Governments do not experiment in matters of this kind. They employ experts of a high standard only, and that is why Cadum was selected. Cadum ointment is wonderfully soothing and healing to the skin tissues. In troubles like eczema, scaly skin, eruptions, chafings, sores, pimples, etc., it gives gratifying relief. It stops irritation and itching and begins healing with the first application. Trial box 10c.; large box, 25c. All druggists. —Advertisement.
